SHOULD BAG LIMIT BE LESS?

Conservationists--and many sportsmen—will hail the announcement of Secretary of Agriculture Hyde that the bag limits on ducks and geese are to be drastically reduced for the season 1930-31. No hunter may then take more than fifteen ducks in a day instead of twenty-five as at present except where the States have established lower limits, and four geese instead of the present maximum eight. This cut is in accordance with the recommendations of the Izaak Walton League of America and many organizations of sportsmen and conservationists. At the annual game conference last month resolutions to this end were adopted.

The reasons given for this change are in part due to temporary and in part to permanent causes. The excessive drought of last year is reported to have been very injurious to migratory water fowl. But the wholesale reclamation of marsh lands in Canada and the Central United States is another and more lasting explanation of the shortage of birds.

There will be, of course, sharp criticism on the part of some hunters. Their arguments are familiar that the diminution of the supply of game has been grossly exaggerated; that in view of the expense and the time consumed in hunting it is only right to permit hunters to take twenty-five ducks a day. In fact, they insist that many a day goes by with hardly any luck and that the maximum of twenty-five is rarely reached. It does not mean that every hunter shoots twenty-five birds every day he goes hunting.

On the side of the conservationists there is an ever-growing body of public opinion. As a matter of fact, twenty-nine states had reduced the bag limits to fifteen ducks a day before even the Federal Government took action. In several states there has been a movement to reduce the number of days during the season when birds may be shot. Thus the tendency is toward affording them greater protestion. This is in accord with the original provisions of the Migratory Game Bird Treaty with Canada, which not only prescribed maximum limits but expressly stipulated that these might be reduced. In practice no State may permit taking more than the maximum declared by the Federal Government, but it may set as much lower a figure as it wishes.

Hand in hand with reducing the bag limits must go greater efforts to have set aside more marsh lands as feeding and breeding grounds. This work is already progressing satisfactorily, but every year sees the encroachment of civilization and the consequent destruction of wilderness areas which were once great food stores for water fowl. It may be said that the more the bag limit is reduced the greater is the need for more refuges and feeding grounds.—The New York Times.

"Business ethics are improving amazingly," remarked the Old Timer the other evening. "I can distinctly remember when I wouldn't consider buying a blue suit on a dark day."

Some time in the winter the Skeptics' society plans to invest in a household appliance which "will pay for itself in three months," to see whether it will meet the payments.

TURKEY MEETING JANUARY 22

The regular monthly meeting of the Maryland Turkey Growers' Association of Kent County will be held at the office of the Kent County Chamber of Commerce on Wednesday afternoon at 1.30 January 22nd. This meeting will review the work of the season and those members who have not yet paid their half-cent commission on turkey sales are requested to bring their accounts up to date as the January meeting completes the first year of the organization and the secretary and treasurer would like to have affairs in line in order to give a proper report the following month.

Growers who still have birds they desire to sell are asked to send word to the secretary. Calls are being made for live birds from time to time and unless such reports are made it will soon be impossible to fill further orders for this season.
