The Kent News

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1931

WE visited the Queen Anne's poultry and corn exhibit at Centreville on Thursday night last and were agreeably surprised at such a large and splendid array of magnificent birds of every kind. It was certainly a most creditable affair.

THANKSGIVING DAY

Next Thursday will be known in America as Thanksgiving Day. This year as November rolls around after months of depression, more often than in years past, families and individuals will be asking the question, "For what am I to be thankful this year?" One may think in looking back over the year's happiness and sorrow that the blessings to be counted seem few. Take your eyes away from your cares and losses, quit grumbling and open a set of "Thank Books" with your mercies on one side and misfortunes on the opposite page and how quickly you will find that the mercies for outnumber the calamities.

Let us remember that Thanksgiving should not be a day of gratitude for only material things, food, houses, wealth, honors and position, but one strong in the same faith, courage and hope for the future that brought our forefathers here to found their homes. We must not lose sight of the fact that happiness and thankfulness are not to be purchased with money and may we come to a fuller understanding of the things which really count in life and to give to Thanksgiving day the dignity, gratitude and reverence that this time-honored festival day originally had. Will we not be much better men and women and wiser citizens if we have in our hearts the kindness of others that is born of gratitude for the many blessings and mercies God has given us?

GOV. ALBERT C. RITCHIE, U. S. Senators M. E. Tydings and Phillips Lee Goldsborough, members of the Board of Regents, and leading clubwomen from throughout the State will take part in the dedication of the Women's Field House and the Women's Dormitory at the University of Maryland on Tuesday, December 1, Miss Adele Stamp, dean of women, has announced.

The dedication of the field house will take place at 3 o'clock and the ceremonies at the dormitory will follow immediately afterward.

PROSPERITY RETURNING

The reopening of seven Maryland banks further demonstrates the fact that business conditions are improving. The fact that these institutions closed to avert embarrassment for depositors, were shown to be sound and able to meet every obligation, is further evidence of the folly of demands of patrons en masse for their funds.

The Maryland institutions referred to come back even stronger than before and more firmly entrenched in the confidence of the public.

The depositors in these banks escaped the fate of depositors of a Wilkes-Barre bank which recently experienced a run by depositors, 20 per cent of whom were robbed by thieving gangs after theyhad withdrawn their funds for supposed assurance of safety. Those who were not robbed by bandits and pickpockets brought back their money the next day and returned it to the safekeeping of the bank. Meantime they sat up over night to guard it against prowling thieves.

It may be interesting to note that the examiners found the bank in excellent condition and that it met all demands and today has more deposits on hand than ever before.

The reopening of closed banks is proceeding throughout the country. This circumstance is being taken as sure evidence of restored confidence of the public and is as an omen of the passing of clouds that have dimmed our financial skies.

The elimination of all fear in such conditions through which we are now passing would of itself help to restore the status of the country to normalcy, and bring back prosperity.

"An Outsider Looking in"

By BILL USILTON

I WAS OVER to visit Toledo's Chief of Police the other day; not at the insistent demands of one of his professional loafers, but as a citizen paying a friendly call to get his opinion on one or two matters.

The gentleman proved to be rotund, jovial and officious, as I had expected, and we had a very enjoyable conversation after he got into a talkative mood following a few salving and complimentary remarks from the old praise agent.

It seems that he has some very interesting views on gangster moving pictures and screen dramas vividly depicting innocent youth enjoying the glow that follows too much of the sparkling beverage; and it was those views that I wanted.

First of all, he is vigorous in his condemnation of the liquor situation, and gave me plenty of examples from his own experience to gratify my own argument that nothing else has been done but to transfer the consumption from the elders to the high school students and even younger set.

Then he tore into the modern parent who allows the child to get so far out of grasp and connection that the poor kids sometimes have to consult the family album to see what the old man looks like.

This figure of the law also feels that gangster pictures are good things to be seen by parents and children; and he emphatically refuses to believe that they have led youths to a career of crime, but on the other hand have brought home to parents their duty and concern.

After seeing a particular film being shown in one of our theatres, the Chief stated that the drunken scenes of high school students in dance halls and private debauches are not tricks of the moving picture studios, but are real cross-sections of modern American life—to which I heartily voice my approval. And he thinks that, after viewing such disgusting scenes, both parents and youth of the age depicted in the film will be more inclined to guard against and steer clear of such practices.

But, and it was this statement by the Chief that interested me most, he forcefully declares that all efforts of police, parents, guardians and youthful organizations can do nothing to guide American youth out of the path it is following unless liquor sales are regulated by the government. I immediately asked him, innocently as my countenance would allow, "What of prohibition and the outlaw of liquor?" Before replying he stared at me as if I was a hopeless case, violently chewed his cigar and said, "Listen, you can't outlaw anything the people want; and when you think you are so smart and moralistic and attempt it you set up something for every child to attempt to violate. And at the same time they are a prey to the lowest types of humanity who bootleg the stuff regardless of the youth of the persons who want to buy, rather than have your sales under control and licensed, and out in the open where only men and women who can handle it are able to obtain it."

Wherefore I thanked him for the interview, and went away jubilant with a slant on the law's attitude toward gangster films and modern youth exposures.

O. O. McIntyre, said by some to be a noted columnist, listed recently some things that this world couldn't do without. Taking the chance of being criticized for stealing another's idea, I will list a few things, people, and habits of persons necessary to the life of Chestertown, to my way of thinking:

The gang who gather on the cellar door in front of the post office... Will Collins and the Brown brothers, nightly settling the affairs of the world in front of Doc Sterling's... Raymond Moody's cane... Joe Wheatley's pompadour... Coach Kibler... Doctor Simpers' ensembles, from shoes to hat... Marion Smith, with his plans, outlines and statistics... Lawyer's Row, which is being invaded by tailors and hair dressers—not to mention the Chamber of Commerce... the high school without a principal... Doc Hughes and HIS Country Club... hucksters and fish merchants on the public square... the Saturday night shopping orgy ...Mr. Blades... Officer Cooper, the town guardian ... Rotary Club.. Rachel Willis and Miss Hicks, who always give me excellent service (they should for the price)... Mrs. Westcott's Court House gang... and the indescribable something that makes us all homesick for the place.

Japan's earthquake zone seldom calls it a day without three or four slight shocks.
