FIVE LOAVES OF BREAD FOR A BUSHEL WHEAT

The high cost of some things is making the housewives sit up and take notice. In a magazine article recently some statistician figured out the cost of a loaf of bread to the farmer and how many loaves he gets for the price of a bushel of wheat.

This article has started many country wives thinking. At a recent gathering in the lower part of the county this matter was given serious consideration. One woman said she though it about time for the housewives to start in baking bread. "When I was a girl," she spouted, "my father took quantities of wheat to the mill and we got a barrel of flour whenever we needed it. There was no such thing then of going to the store and buying half a dozen loaves of bread which can be squeezed up to the size of a huge snowball. There is not much strength in such loaves, and we housewives would show more appreciation for our husbands and our children if we started in making bread and using some of the wheat grown on the farm.

"I imagine a miller would be delighted to grind wheat for the bran and a little share of the flour. Even if he wanted more than my father had to give it would be better for the entire family than to sit by and eat the baker's bread at 5, 6, 7, and even 8 cents a loaf. And these loaves are not much larger than some of the rolls of former times."

This started the women to thinking, and as soon as the cooler weather sets in they say there will be a falling off of bread sales in the country store, and more bread the kind that mother made will be eaten.

One of the men present in sympathy with the women's view chimed in by saying there were not hard times at present. It is just plain extravagance that makes people hard up. "When I was a boy very few farmers or even those living in the towns owned a team of horses used exclusively for driving. They couldn't afford it. Now nearly every farmer owns an automobile, and nearly every person living in the towns own one, some two, and even some have three. It seems to me that the people are to blame tehmselves for the depression. They are living beyond their means, not buying the things they should and spending all their money for pleasure.

"A farm hand alongside of me last week went to town and paid $125 down on a car. This represented the savings of a number of years. He promised to pay a certain sum each month until the machine is paid for. Now if he required several years to save $125 how can he save three times that much and run the car It can't be done, and someone else is going to pay that bill.

"I think the women are right. Let's examine ourselves and find out where the trouble lies. I believe it will be with us and not with the country, with the soil, or with Providence. The crops are abundant, the labor is plentiful, but the desire to make the best of things has not been shown on the surface like it was in former times.

"I for one think the women are right and I enjoy a good piece of home-made bread in place of the bought variety. Wheat can be used to advantage, and I believe the children and the rest of the family will fare better if more home-made bread is eaten."

To prove that the average family likes home-made bread better than baker's bread one has only to visit a store and there see the people buying home-made rolls, biscuit, etc.. at a much higher price than even the baker's bread.

Some farmers have received less than forty cents a bushel for their wheat. A loaf of bread at eight cents will weigh about a pound. Five loaves for forty cents costs the farmer the price of a bushel of wheat —60 pounds.

It is said that in other sections of the county the women are getting ready to return to home cooking. If the men insist on it the women will no doubt start in baking bread again. This will be the beginning of better times, and all along the line other things treated in a similar manner will certainly improve conditions. At least the ladies of Talbot think so.—Easton-Star Democrat.

SHOOTS NEGRO AT HEN HOUSE DOOR

Late Friday night Bedford Roe, a farmer of near Clayton heard someone in his chicken house. He went out but the intruder managed to get away. Roe, however, continued to watch and about 2 o'clock Saturday morning saw a man trying to get in the chicken house and shot him with a shotgun.

It is said that Robert Gross, colored was the man shot. Gross, it is said, managed to get to his home which is but a short distance away but that his condition was such he had to be taken to the Kent General Hospital, Dover. The shot is said to have entered his side.
