OLD SOL is trying himself this month. The mercury has been playing around 94 degrees for days and thunder storms almost daily.

THE summer home of Charles C Keedy at Still Pond, was the scene of the annual gathering of about 35 members of the Delaware bar, members of the Delaware State Supreme Court, State officials and business men who were the guests of Mr. Keedy Saturday. Governor Buck was unable to be present because of an illness. Mr. Keedy is a son of the late Judge Keedy, former Western Maryland jurist.

J. FRANK SHORT, president of the Federalsburg Volunteer FireCompany, announced that the company cleared $2,000 from the recent carnival held early in July, the gross receipts totalling about $5,000.

Of this sum, about $1,200 will be invested in the replacement of 1,000 feet of worn hose, and the remainder placed in treasury to meet incidental needs. William Wagner, fire chief, acted as carnival chairman this year.

THE State Camp of Maryland, Patriotic Order Sons of America, held its annual convention in Easton, on Tuesday and Wednesday. Delegates from all parts of the State were in attendance. Kent's representatives were Joseph Duyer, Rufus Collins, J. C. Loud.

Hotel Avon was headquarters and the business sessions were held in the State armory. M. B. Kinnamon, of Templeville, is State president.

One of the important matters discussed is the group-insurance plan.

Wednesday evening a patriotic meeting was held at the armory. H. H. Balch, of Easton, presided. Congressman T. Alan Goldsborough addressed the meeting.

The Cattle Judges Bring Home Cup

Governor Ritchie Monday afternoon was given a practical demonstration by three Maryland youths in the manner in which they won the international dairy cattle judging contest, held in Warwick, England, on July 8. William Chilcoat, one of the trio, presented the Governor with the gold cup won in the contest. Other members of the team are Chas. Clark and James Johnston.

Mistletoe's Myrtle, a world's champion Guernsey, was brought from the barn and Chilcoat, Clark and Johnston, the 16-year-old champion launched into the demonstration. The cow's fine points, including her sleek neck and straight legs, were flaunted before the audience, while cameras and sound apparatus recorded the event.

After the exhibition of judging Chilcoat presented the cup to Governor Ritchie, who congratulated the boys on their achievement.

The boys returned to Baltimore the gold cup, wooden shoes and canes. Teams from England and North Ireland were the other participants in the contest.

Chilcoat lives in Sparks, Md.; Clark at 3110 White avenue, and Johnston in Belair, Md.

During their stay abroad the bays visited the islands of Guernsey and Jersey, off the coast of England, Holland and made a brief visit to Paris.

The contest just closed marked the third victory scored by Maryland teams. The previous victories occurred in 1922 and 1923. The United States has won the championship six times in the past decade.

Out of a possible 2,160 points the Maryland boys scored 1,917, England 1,812 and North Ireland 1,779. Prior to their trip abroad the team won the national contest in December at St. Louis, where they defeated contestants from twenty eight States.

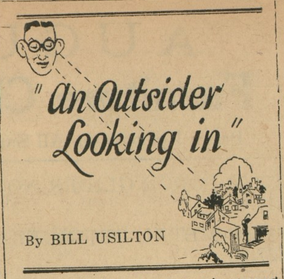

The champions were accompanied on the trip by their trainers, M. Morrison Carroll, county agent for Harford county, and Howard C. Barker, specialist in dairying at the extension service of the University of Maryland.

Chilcoat, in addition to being a member of the winning team, also scored the highest number of points in the contest. He scored 653 points out of a possible 720. Clark, although second in the contest with a total of 650 points, was judged high man in assigning reasons for his selections. Johnston was awarded sixth place in the contest, while only ten points behind the third man.

Chilcoat graduated last year from the Sparks High School and is looking forward to attending the University of Maryland.

Johnston was a student at McDonogh School last year and Clark attended Western Maryland College last year after graduating from the Fallair High School.

By BILL USILTON

REALIZING that my insurance was paid up I took my life in my hands the other day and, with a nonchalance that comes only with the use of Murads, allowed myself to be whisked up to the 102nd floor of the Empire State Building. Not that such action is really dangerous, but I have a distinct horror of fast-moving elevators and this alone has kept me from going up there sooner. However, the ride up fully repaid me for the dollar I spent and at last I've had a real thrill.

Gazing out of the window on floor 102 I realized for the first time what an insignificant thing I am, and it is no great mystery to me now why birds have such little regard for the realm of man; why they can sit with carefree abandon upon the masts of our boats; or build their nests wherever and whenever they please.

The sight of my fellow creatures, like so many ants crawling along the streets a thousand feet below, took away from me every bit of the conceit that we all cherish and left me a mere speck even smaller in importance than the puny creatures far below. And, to be perfectly truthful, I had an awful time regaining even a portion of my old composure and lordly confidence when I reached the street.

Though the view is marvelous and the thrill of being up in the air so high is distinctly exhilarating, the lasting and genuine effect of visiting the top of the world's tallest building is the way it has of depating a swelled head. After seeing what it did to mine I've already made out quite a long list of acquaintances who need —and will get, if I have anything to do with it—the same treatment that has left me a very meek and ingratiating young man.

DON'T think I'm trying to steal a march on Mr. Ripley and his "Believe It Or Not," but did you know that more cows and calves pass through Times Square, New York—the most cosmopolitan section in the world—in a single day than you will see in any part of Kent county in a week? And I mean cows that "moo" and calves that are chopped up into livers.

Standing on the corner of Forty-Second Street and Broadway the other morning I counted six truckloads in the short space of fifteen minutes. To explain this parade of beefsteaks on the hoof I might add that one of New York's largest slaughter houses is on the banks of the Hudson river, between Thirty-fifth and Forty-second streets; and it is here that most of the quartering and chopping is done to supply the wants of the New Yorkers who don't happen to be vegetarians. I thought most of the meat came in quartered and halved—or maybe sixteenthed—from the stockyards of the West... but I've been wrong before.

****

I RAN into a typical New Yorker the other day. One of the few natives to be found in this dear old dirty town. They are almost as scarce as the Indians who use to own the place, and nearly as ignorant when it comes to a knowledge of anything outside of Manhattan Island. I don't think he even knew where milk came from before it was put in bottles, it was that bad.

Yet he thought every successful man in the city was a native New Yorker, and raved about two who he thought were born on Manhattan Island, when I know for certain that they came in from small towns not unlike Rock Hall or Worton.

He thinks the universe is bounded by the Hudson River and the Atlantic Ocean, and that Central Park is just like the country that exists outside of the bounds of New York City.

If I could think of a good enough excuse I'd bring him down to Kent County just to see life as it should be. He'd be terribly lonely, the fresh air would probably kill him, and he'd die with the thought of how unfair it is for a God to keep people hidden in such a forlorn spot away from the blessings of modern civilization that are to be found only in Manhattan You know, pounding the concrete pavements in leather heels makes them that way!

He should know of the thousands of country lads and lassies who came to New York, and made good; and the tens of thousands who are continually arriving to make this place what it really is. He would then have a little more respect for the "provinces," and it might help him to keep up with the hot pace that the "yokels" are setting.

****

By the way, if you like your humor combined with just a dash of sarcasm get Donald Stam or Miss Hallie Toulson—not forgetting Doc Sterling—to order you a copy of the magazine, Ballyhoo. It's a riot. After reading their version of the nation's ads you'll get more of a kick out of your newspaper, even the good old KENT NEWS...And so, to the showers.
