GRADUATION days.

THE County Commissioners of Queen Anne's have declared the tax rate to be $1.50, same as last year.

YOU WILL be glad to hear that Roger W. Babson, who told us, in 1929, that we were just stepping on the toboggan, downward bound, now says trade is on the upgrade. He predicts we have seen the worst of our troubles, and that prosperity is coming greater than that which ended in the autufn of 1929.

The President agrees with that optimistic prediction, and Wall Street, cheering up a little yesterday, increased hope.

When renewed prosperity does come, it may come with a rush surpassing all experience.

SCHOOLS in Kent county would not be as efficient if it were not for the support and help of the Parent-Teachers' Associations. These organizations do considerable work in the year toward making the school more efficient. Even the buildings and grounds are greatly improved with funds raised by these associations. They are limited in their funds but they make a splendid showing with what they have.

FRESH AIR WORK IN KENT

Miss Margurite Herrington, representative of the New York Tribune Fresh Air work, spent several days in Kent reorganizing the local committee last week.

A number of children from New York's poorer homes were entertained in the county last year and several who acted as hostesses are endeavoring to have the same children returned to them this season.

The consensus of opinion among local hostesses was that the children were very well behaved and lovable and among those who made the experiment last year there is little hesitancy in opening their homes again and it is easily realized that the need is even greater this year than before.

The children will arrive in Kent at the Chestertown station on the evening train July 22 and will be returned to New York on August 5 unless some hostesses decide to keep the children for a longer period.

Those interested in entertaining one or more child for that short period are requested to notify Mrs. Nell C. Westcott by letter or by phone at the earliest possible date.

The local committee consists of Mrs. Westcott, chairman; Mrs. Thos. Massey, vice chairman; Mrs. Eva Kilbourne; Miss Fannie Beckman; Miss Helen Schellington, the Rev. John White, Mrs. Frank W. Smith and Mrs. W. O. Selby.

If any one is desirious of giving little city-hemmed children a two week's paradise in Kent and is not able for various reasons to take the child in one's own home, arrangement can be made to pay a nominal amount for board and the child placed in a good farm home where the spirit of the farm family is willing but the finances weak.

It is understood that the free open country life, with plenty of fresh vegetables and milk is vacation enough for the little children who only know the city streets. Last year one child was hugely entertained and deeply impressed by seeing her hostess-mother make bread and cake. Driving in the cows and tending to the chickens is an event that all city children enjoy to the utmost. In this way it makes the problem of keeping the visiting children happy a very simple matter. Every day in the country opens new wonders to the city-bred visitors and much pride is taken in the newly acquired coat of tan.

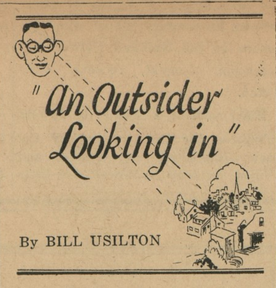

A CORRECTION

Mrs. Harold M. Baker, of Quaker Neck, states that the item published recently in the NEWS is not correct. That she has not sold recently anything from her home. We gladly give this space for Mrs. Baker's correction. She is still raising fine turkeys and publishing valuable literature on how to treat same and not dealing in antiques.

TOMORROW is Father's Day. We will see.

THE Queen Anne's school bonds this week sold at a premium of $7.26 above par for each $100 bond.

THE KENT NEWS is $1.50 a year. Look at the date on your paper and soon when it should be paid.

By BILL USILTON

Famous Kent Countians
(You'll Never Guess)

One of Kent County's hustlers, Lumberman, banker, hotelman, welfare worker, politician, dance hall proprietor, handshaker, pink cheeks, walrus mustache and shiny baldpate. Rather carry his straw in hand than wear it. The recognized master when it comes to separating a man from his dollars in the cause of charity. Likes a good time, and has it. When he walks north his toes point east and west. Often wears colored shirts with a white semi-soft collar. Known to some folks as the chief Rollo. Detests driving a car... a charming miss usually pilots him to Chestertown. Always to be seen with a cigar...more often in the act of relighting it. An eligible widower. Likes children...will talk at great length about his nephew. Energetic and inclined to portliness. When speaking his words tumble out in hurried profusion...his thoughts several sentences ahead of his tongue. His advice is sound...highly valued ...tempered with his own experience in many enterprises. Takes his vacation in the cooler months. A friend to be cherished. And if its any help, his first name is Howard.

Still imbued with the Eastern Shoreman's love for swimming and a delectable coat of tan I stepped out the other evening with two of the roomies to find these luxuries that I used to indulge in at Rolph's Wharf under the watchful eyes of Aunt Nancy and Uncle Henry Evans.

We were optimists for, in the midst of New York, we wanted swimming without crowds and sun-tan along with it...with the minimum exertion and inconvenience.

We sauntered into the Park Central Hotel like three salesmen from Buffalo, hired a locker, took a cleansing shower before submitting to a very thorough examination, and then were provided with amazingly close-fitting suits. Ready for the spray we were led upstairs on soft carpets to a beautiful Morraccan pool, edged round with a balcony from which the more timid could watch the antics of their bolder brethren.

I plunged in, came up, and found it all to be very, very nice. Quite delighted I paddled around like a young pup until a very shrill whistle stilled my flippers. I came to the surface to find my playmates lumbering up over the sides of the pool in one wild scramble. Of course I followed, fearing for the moment that we had gotten into the crocodile pool by mistake, and burst with them into a small silvered room at the far end of the pool. We were met with a blinding flare of violet light...somebody yelled for us to don the colored glasses lying about...and we were left to blink by ourselves for five minutes.

Then...another swim...five more minutes with violet ray...we were ready for bed. The locker room opened up with more wonders in the way of rough towels, combs and brushes (sterilized), hair tonic if needed, whisk brooms, and bowing porters. These worked miracles, and we paused on the way out to gaze in a mirror upon countenances that had exchanged the palor of the sky-scraper inmate for the sun-tan of two weeks vacation in the short space of an hour. And as Eric Wood exclaimed, "All for a dollar!"

You know, I find the barbers here in New York far inferior to our own in Chestertown. I don't mean inferior so far as tonsorial ability is concerned but inferior in their ability to discourse volubly and intelligently upon any and every subject. Ralph W. Barnett, Harry W. Fallowfield, J. S. Vandegrift, Charley Pippin and Mr. Whaley keep you preoccupied and slumbering with a flow of facts that carry you through baseball, last Sunday's church service, the price of wheat, the latest real estate deals, the lighter scandals, activity of the marriage bureau, stock quotations and what not. However, the barber in New York has specialized in the preparation of his conversation for customers. To gather your latest news of the theatre you must be shaved and shampooed on Broadway ...for Wall street dope you have to be massaged near the Federal Reserve'..fashion news comes with a singe on Fifth Avenue...and for news of the elite you are lathered and scraped at the Biltmore or the Plaza. It is certainly deplorable that these face patters can speak only of the happenings within their locality. Though adept with scissors and clippers, they have lost a touch of the barber shop that is as traditional as the red and white striped pole.

Doc "Chirps" Clarke gave me quite a break in his front-page column in the Worcester Democrat the other week, and delved back into the years to remind me that he remembers when I used to tag along Main street clinging to Mother's skirts. Of course I can't remember those days when the name "Billy" (how I've tried to live it down) appropriately described my cherubic countenance and statue, but I do recall sitting at barristers' table in the Court House with Doc, watching him do tricks with paper and pencil while Frazier Russell drew heart-rending sobs from the jury.

WE OFFER CONGRATULATIONS

We extend the heartiest congratulations to our contemporary, The KENT NEWS, on being admitted to the Century Club of American newspapers. For 108 years The KENT NEWS, which began its existence as The KENT BUGLE, has been serving its place in this community. And for a large part of those years it has been guided by one family, the Usiltons, father and sons.

Publishing a newspaper week after week is no easy undertaking. Printing machinery has a way of going awry when least expecttd and least desired and hardship after hardship creep up to make the getting out of the weekly edition oft times a struggle.

In the more than thirty-seven years that The Enterprise has made its weekly visits to Kent county homes we have experienced enough to convince us that any paper which has continued publication for a period of more than a century is worthy of special recognition.

And so we repeat our congratulations and best wishes to The KENT NEWS and its editors, Fred. G. and William B. Usilton. May the trio live long and prosper.—Chestertown Enterprise.

We appreciate the above words of congratulations from our friendly neighbors and extend to them best wishes for continued success.

CHESTERTOWN friends of James P. Keating, of Centreville, were shocked by his sad and sudden death last Saturday at Centreville. For many years a local merchant active in Republican politics and a popular member of frattrnal and civic clubs.

In early life he entered the profession of pharmacist and for a long period of years was prominently identified with the business of the community.

Those who knew him intimately will constantly cherish a recollection fragrant with his ideals of comradship; his loyalty and devotion to those held nearest and dearest.

He was a prominent Mason and Rotarian.
