PUBLIC AFFAIRS DISCUSSED HERE

A delegation from Maryland women's clubs as well as a sprinkling of visitors from Delaware. Pennsylvania and Virginia's Eastern Shore gathered here Saturday for the 4th annual Eastern Shore Institute of Public Affairs at Washington College today. A special effort was made this year to interest men of the Eastern Shore in the institute and a number of bankers and other professional men were present.

President Paul E. Titsworth of the local college, presided at the morning session when Lazzare Teper, Russian student in the graduate school of Johns Hopkins University, spoke on Russia as an international problem. He was followed by Dr. Esther Caukins, chairman of the department of international relations of the American Association of University Women, who composed the present Russian government with those that have preceded it and with other existing governments in Europe. Mrs. L. Emmett Holt, Jr., chairman of the Maryland Co-operative Committee on the Cause and Cure of War, led the discussion on the problem.

Mrs. Charles E. Elliott, president of the Maryland League of Women Voters, presided at the afternoon session. Dr. William Brown, professor of economics in the University of Maryland, spoke on the business cycle and causes of economic depression. Frank Dryden, city engineer of Salisbury, and others also were speakers.

Conditions of poverty brought about by unemployment constitute one of the greatest causes of breaking down the standards of living and the homes of America, Anna D. Ward, General Secretary of the Family Association of Maryland said:

The averages of unemployment and economic depression are not only felt in the constantly growing monetary outlook for relief work, but throughout the social structure of the nation, she said, and added that social workers had a duty in painting that picture until "men see and understand stand and until their emotions drive their brains to find the solution."

During the month of February, 1931, 81 large cities of the United States and Canada spent over $10,000,000 in direct relief, distributed among 396,000 families, and represented an increase of 116 per cent over the same month of 1930, with the unemployment crisis hitting the country last year.

"Unemployment destroys standards of living, homes are lost, families move from good neighborhoods to poor ones, household effects gathered slowly over the years are disposed of for almost nothing or broken up and used for fuel. Recreational advantages are curtailed and the younger or older members of the family are apt to spend their enforced leisure in occupations which contribute to personality deterioration rather than development."

The institute was arranged by Miss Lavinia Engle, secretary of the Maryland League of Women Voters, in conjunction with the Washington College branch of the Young Women Voters League of Maryland. Miss Thelma Twilley, of East New Market Md., is president of the local college branch and in charge of local arrangements. The Kent county branch of the State league co-operated in making the institute a success, local committeewomen being Mrs. Fred. G. Usilton, Mrs. P. M. Brooks and Miss Ida Crow. The program committee consisted of President Titsworth, Dr. Esther M. Dole, dean of Women; Miss Margaret Brewer, associate dean of women, and Dr. William R. Howell, professor of political economy.

Ushers at the institute were Misses Elizabeth Brice, Betterton; Genevieve Carvel, Baltimore; Ellen Flick, Sudlersville, and Mary Parks, Centreville. The serving committee were Misses Dorothy Dates, Port Deposit; Katherine Collins, Cambridge; Kathryn Eastman, Glenarm; Ethel Herrera, Randallstown; Mary Hatcherson, Rock Hall; Lou LeKites, Chincoteague, Va.; Marie Poole, Williamsburg; Ruth Sewell, Queen Anne's, and Helen Towers, Hobbs, Md. The decorating committee were Misses Louise Mandrell, Carmichael; Eugenia Morgan, Queen Anne; Dora Sewell, Queen Anne, and Majorie Smith, Midland Park, N. J.

Mrs. Elliott, of Baltimore, president of the Maryland League of Women voters, was entertained at luncheon at the college Saturday and among the guests were the speakers. The luncheon was tendered by the Washington College branch of the Young Women Voters League of Maryland. The hostesses were Misses Dorothy Bates, of Port Deposit, Katherine Collins, of Cambridge, Kathryn Eastman, of Glenarm, Ethel Herrera, of Randallstown, Mary Hutchinson, of Boston, Lou LeKites, of Chincoteague, Va., Mary Poole, of Williamsburg, Ruth Sewell, of Queen Anne, and Helen Towers, of Hobbs.

DISTRIBUTION OF FERTILIZERS AFFECTS RESULTS

Recent studies reveal that the value of fertilizer is decided to quite an extent by the manner in which it is applied. Heavy applications of fertilizer may be broadcast to advantage, especially on heavy soils. On light soils half of heavy application may be broadcast — half applied to the hill or row.

The placing of the fertilizer in hill or row affects the results produced by the fertilizer very materially. Fertilizer should not be placed in direct or close contact with the seed. The studies to date indicate that placing the fertilizer in strips or bands two inches wide and about six inches from the seed is the most effective manner of applying fertilizer to the row. Modern machinery is designed to distribute fertilizer to out or both sides of the row so as to have the fertilizer come too close contact with the seed.

OVER-HEATING CHICKS

Professor H. D. Munroe says: "for late spring and early summer brooding 90 degrees at the edge of the hover is warm enough for the first week. Each week after the first, lower the temperature 5 degrees is reached. This will mean that after the chicks are five weeks old they will need heat only at night and durnoing cold, rainy days. If they are taught to roost by this time there is no need for any heat in a well constructed brooder house after the sixth week.

Over-heating causes the chicks to have low vitality or poor resistance to disease. During the first two weeks over-heated chicks will develop bowel trouble. After that period coccidiosis is liable to get into a flock of low vitality chicks.

Make late hatched chicks "tough" and there will be no more trouble raising them than with early hatched chicks."

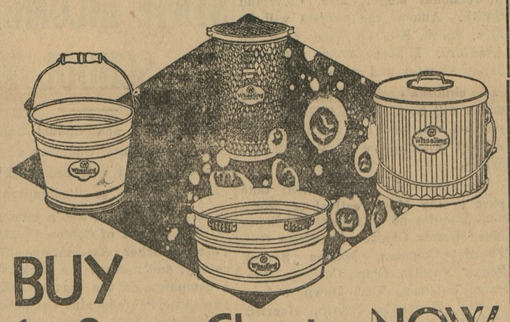

WOOL CHEAP — TIME TO MAKE BLANKETS

The prospects for wool prices are not alluring. People are asking about wool blankets. Possibly this situation may result in those wanting blankets placing orders with those who have wool to sell. In previous years many blankets have been made from Kent county wool. Now would seem to be an opportune time to replenish the supply of blankets. The Extension Service has information.
