WHICH HAS THE BETTER CHANCE OF SECURING A HUSBAND?

THE BUSINESS OR HOME GIRL?

One Has Larger Circle of Friends and the Other is apt to be Easier to Please—School Incident.

As a rule the business girl has a far larger circle of acquaintances, and in consequence makes many more friends than her stay-at-home sister. Seven marriages out of ten are the result of propinquity, and many a life-long partnership has resulted from two people meeting continually in business. It may be some months before they realize all that these meetings mean, for Cupid is sometimes very chary in his lovemaking. It is seldom the man a girl sees only occasionally that she marries but the man whom she meets continually day by day. Love steals into her heart unawares, and one day she wakes up to the fact that the man whom she has looked upon for so long as a friend has become part of her life, and that she cannot live without him. But this, of course, applies both to the stay-at-home girl and to the business girl. The knowledge that she has her own work to do in the world gives to the business girl a feeling of independence, which makes her better able to hold her own than the stay-at-home girl, who in the majority of cases is entirely dependent upon her parents.

But although independence is a good thing in itself, it is sometimes just a little apt to make a business girl a shade too particular in her choice of a husband. The possession of a little money of her own makes her ambitious for more, and instead of being content to commence at the bottom of the ladder, as her parents did before her, she wants to start life at the top. Among the men with whom her daily life brings her in contact there may perhaps be one who is anxious to win her for his wife, but he is only just beginning life, so she turns a deaf ear to his protestations of affection, confident in knowledge that she is independent and can afford to wait. Her life is full of interest and the world is before her so why should she be in such a hurry? The stay-at-home sister, on the other hand, finds her days very empty, and time hangs heavily on her hands. If a lover comes her way she is only too glad to welcome him. Even if he is not exactly her ideal he will at least be able to relieve the monotony and give her something to think about.

Whether she be in business or whether her duties and responsibilities be at home, it is the sympathetic, sweet-natured girl that a man generally chooses for his wife. And although the business girl may perhaps have more opportunities of meeting men than her stay-at-home sister, it rests with a woman herself to make or mar her own happiness. Philadelphia Inquirer.

NOVELISTS TELL US

—That love is heaven.

—That this same versatile and peculiar passion is hell. So, whatever you pay, it's not a case of taking your choice.

—That the delicate, beautiful heroine of old is not really necessary to romance.

—That, psychologically at least, the feelings of the ill-favored are as interesting as those blessed by the Graces.

—That married life (his by inference) isn't worth talking about unless it's full of thorns and tragedies.

—That character may be read in hands, ears, eyes, noses or anything else to which the novelist has given any thought.

—That the wrong people usually marry. (If they didn't, what would the novelist do then, poor thing?)

—That they exploit the shady side, not because they prefer it—bless you, no—but because it's their duty.

—That seasons, environment and circumstances generally have much to do with the preference of heroes and heroines of the second magnitude.

—And he reminds us again that anything may be proved by fact, providing one may choose one's own facts.

GOOD PRICES FOR OLD BOOKS.

Suppressed First Edition of Thackeray's "Vanity Fair" Brings $130.

New York, June 6.—At to-day's auction of first and rare editions of the famous suppressed first edition of Thackeray's "Vanity Fair," London, 1840, with the portrait drawn by Thackeray himself of the Marquis of Steyne, which proved to be a faithful likeness of the Marquis of Hertford, brought $130. An original quarto of Shakespeare's "Julius Caesar," a tragedy as it is now acted at the Theatre Royal, London, 1684, closely cut by the binder, sold for $40.

A first edition of "The Story of Venice," by John Ruskin, Lewis Carroll's copy, with his full signature on the title of each of the three volumes, London, 1851 brought $33. A first edition of "The Seven Lamps of Architecture," by the same author, London, 1849, sold for $16.

DON'T FOR SUMMER BOARDERS.

Don't ask for ice water. The well water is as cold as any self-respecting stomach will ask for.

Don't expect half a pint of cream on 29 raspberries.

Don't ask for a glass of milk at every meal. It is not good for you. One homespun cow equals eight quarts of milk, equals one quart of cream and three meals a day for eight people! And where does the baby come in?

Don't ask for ice cream nine times in seven days. The icehouse is four miles away.

Don't wear too many starched things. Steam laundries are not found on every farm.

Don't think any old thing will do to wear on the farm, but don't "dress" too much. Both extremes are in bad taste.

Don't imagine that because country fare and ways are different they are not so good as city things and ways. They may be better.

Don't ask for things you don't see, or for things out of season. Is two miles to the store.

Don't try to be a superior person. It may lead to mistakes.

Don't indulge in improving conversation—unless you need it.

Don't sit up late or be late to meals. Both are unsanitary.

Don't complain because there are no links; life is more than golf.

Don't ask for sterilized milk for the baby—unless you bring your own sterilizer.

There are other "d'n'ts," but they can all be condensed into the Golden Rule. Prophets Chamber.

A SHORT LESSON IN MATHEMATICS.

What's that, my son? Figures won't lie?

Oh, fudge! I've heard that before.

But, you know, I'm from Missouri.

Now, my boy, let us see.

We will begin the trouble by supposing two women each owned 30 chickens, which they agreed to sell and divide the proceeds share and share alike.

Behold! A peddler appears upon the stage of action.

He buys the women's poultry at the rate of $1 for two chickens, which makes $15 for her 30 egg offsprings.

The other woman's chickens are less valuable, so the peddler takes her collection at the rate of $1 for three chicks, or $10 for the 30, making a total of $25 for the entire crowd of 60 chickens.

Now comes the division of the spoils. How much does each woman get on the split-up.

$12.50, you say.

That looks all right on the face of the returns—but

Let us see some more.

The first woman sold 30 chickens at the rate of two for $1. The second woman disposed of 30 chickens at the rate of three for $1. That makes a grand total of 60 chickens at the rate of five for $2, does it not?

Well, 5 into 60 goes 12 times—and 12 times $2 is $24—the sum received for the 60 chickens.

Therefore, each woman in qu't the game with $12 in her fist.

Yet, my son, you say figures do not lie. Then, what became of that other $1. Eh?
