Jan. 25-6:

MR. W. C. ROLPH, DEAR SIR: The Self-Feeding Huber Separator with Blower, that I bought of you last year gave me perfect satisfaction. It threshes very rapidly and does the work in perfect order. The Huber Self-feeder, I think, is superior to hand feeding at all times. I like the way the Blower Fan is driven better than any I have ever seen. We can truthfully and cheerfully say that the Huber is the finest rig ever sold on the Eastern Shore.

Yours truly,
ALDAY CLEMENTS,
MILLINGTON, MD., Jan. 20, 1902.

THE HUBER MFG. CO., HARRISBURG, PA.: GENTLEMEN: The Huber rig we got from you last season is a beauty. The engine the most economical in fuel, powerful, on road and belt, and the easier to operate than any other engine we have ever seen. The thresher will thresh faster, save more grain, than any other, while the self-feeder handled the heavy straw of last season faster and better than hand feeding. We can truthfully and cheerfully say that the Huber is the finest rig ever sold on the Eastern Shore.

Yours very truly,
NICKERSON & WOOD.

INTERESTING NEW LONDON.

Mrs. Hill Writes of the Quaint Old Connecticut Town.

NEW LONDON, CONN., July 25, 1902.

Among the most interesting reminders of the past is the oldest cemetery in this part of the city of New London. It is kept in perfect order as far as human agency can possibly accomplish, but the destructive ravages of time are impossible to arrest entirely, and many of the oldest tombstones are crumbling and their inscriptions becoming gradually obliterated, in fact, many are hopelessly injured now. Among these memorials to the silent sleepers below the sod are sentences which convey admonitions to the living instead of being eulogistic of the dead. This morning I lingered in this hallowed place and have copied the following inscriptions, deeming them of value for quaintness and originality. One is to the memory of Capt. Corss, commander of the ship "Hebe," who died on his passage from Jamaica to New London in 1791:

"Though Boreas' blasts and Neptune's waves Have tossed me to and fro, In spite of both, by God's commands, I harbor here below; Where I do now at Anchor lie, With many of my fleet, Yet, by and bye, I must set sail, My Admiral, 'Christ,' to meet."

In memory of Lieut. Chapman, who was killed at Fort Griswold, September 6th, 1781:

"How suddenly death's arrows fly, They strike us, and they pass not by, But hurl us into our graves."

To a lady who died on the anniversary of her birthday is this epitaph inscribed:

"A mournful birthday to her friends." March 30, 1792.

An inscription to the memory of a young wife reads thus:

"In youthful bloom, death laid me down, Here to await the trumpet's sound, When God commands, I will arise, To meet my Saviour in the skies."

A Miss Anne Denison, who died Nov. 19th, 1767, aged 24 years, has the following inscribed upon her tomb:

"Her body's here, her soul to heaven is gone, There to receive its righteous doom."

Another solemn one is this:

"Remember death." May 17th, 1792.

An old man has the following:

"Death is a debt to nature due, Which I have paid, and so must you."

To a young man's memory is this:

"Ludovick, the young, the virtuous, and the gay, Though crowned with every beauty, may not stay;

The virtuous youth has won his Saviour's love, And He has taken him to Himself above."

Sept. 18th, 1773.

An admonition is this one:

"Reader, go mind the better part, Believe the Gospel, mend thy heart, Go learn to live, go learn to die, For die you must, as well as I."

Nov. 13th, 1790.

A little child has this epitaph:

"My date on earth was very short, My voyage of life soon o'er, Being clothed in robes which Jesus wrought, My soul shall rest secure."

Feb. 26th, 1786.

In memory of a young soldier is this inscription:

"Here lies a youth of valor, known and tried, Who in his country's service fought, bled and died."

May 8, 1783.

An infant has this to his memory:

"Save fruitless tears, and weep no more, This child's not lost but gone before; Death's a haven towards which all winds drive, And where at last each mortal must arrive; Be therefore sure, that when thy corpse shall lie At anchor, bus thy soul may mount on high."

Sept. 3d, 1729.

The following in memory of a young man is more familiar:

"How loved and valued once, avails him not, To whom related, or by whom beget; A heap of dust shall be all of thee, 'Tis all thou art, and all the proud shall be."

Nov. 22, 1780.

A good woman has this epitaph:

"Beneath this stone, Death's prisoner lies, The stone shall move, the prisoner rise, When Jesus with Almighty word, Calls His dead saints to meet their God."

Feb. 12, 1773.

The following is an old man's inscription:

"Dear Jesus Thou hast power to save, In Thee I'll trust while in the grave, My flesh in dust shall be Thy care, And Thou wilt raise me, strong and fair."

Feb. 7th, 1791.

To a brave soldier is the following tribute:

"Shaply! thy deeds reverse the common doom, And make thy name immortal in a tomb."

Feb. 14th, 1782.

Mrs. Mary Woodruff, who died June 10th, 1775, in the 24th year of her age, has this epitaph:

"When a signal of her leave to go, Home to her Saviour, free from sin and woe, Death from his quiver threw a fatal dart, A pulse of joy leapt from her heart, 'Enough of life and all its joys,' she cried, 'Welcome my Father's Messenger,' and died."

A short admonition is this:

"Go, reader, love thy soul, and learn to die."

In memory of Naomi, daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth Westcott, who died Feb. 17th, 1771, in the 20th year of her age.

"Despise the world, with all its fleeting joys, Compared with 'Heaven' they are but toys."

Epitaph on Capt. Richard Lord, deceased May 17th, 1653. The oldest one still legible:

"The bright star of our calvary lies here, Unto the State a counselor full dear, And to the truth, a friend of sweet content, To Hartford town a silver ornament, To merchants as a pattern he might stand, Adventuring dangers now by sea and land."

Harriet L. W. Hill.

A monument to a young minister aged 30, who died Sept. 6th, 1776, has this inscription:

"Zion may in his fall bemoan, A beauty and a pillar gone."

Two little sisters, Sarah and Eunice, have this epitaph:

"When children young are snatched away, Fond parents let your tears be stayed; Did not the blessed Saviour say, 'Of such my Heavenly Kingdom's made.'"

Sept. 14th, 1772.

An old man has this on his tombstone:

"Here let me rest my weary head, Till Christ my Lord shall raise the dead."

This one inscribed to a lady:

"Stand still, kind reader, drop a tear, Upon the dust that slumbers here, And when you read the fate of me, Think of the glass that runs for thee."

March 27th, 1791.

As specimens of ancient literature in this old burial place, these sentiments are worthy of attention, for it is only in such places they are inscribed. I have not given the quaint spelling, but only the literal meaning.

Harriet L. W. Hill.

Women's Reform Union, and Miss Elizabeth Mackenzie is at its head. Hereafter if a man who is known to them is seen entering a saloon or is caught doing anything against the moral code of the trust, he will be blacklisted by his fair associates. This blacklisting means that his best girl will refuse to have anything to do with him unless he immediately mends his ways. He will also be barred from parties, and will be snubbed if he meets any of the members of the union on the street.

Thus far the trust has been getting along with remarkable success. It has been in existence only a week or so, yet in that time a dozen men classed as moral delinquents have been outdoing themselves in their efforts to have the blacklist against them removed.

The trust was formed as a result of a revival meeting held there recently. Rev. Mr. Williams, who conducted the revival, buried his entire vocabulary at saloons and drinking men. The young women voted unanimously to enter upon the work. They drew up a set of by-laws, among which was the following:

"Men with the following habits are to be boycotted: Smoking to the extent of being cigarette, cigar or pipe fiends, gambling, drinking, swearing, chewing tobacco, stealing, keeping late hours or lying."

Every man who is reported to this union as having any bad habits shall be watched by a committee appointed by the union. If this committee finds that he is guilty of the things charged against him the girl with whom he associates shall be instructed to warn him that he must reform. If he fails to reform he then will be blacklisted.

"A blacklist shall mean that a man convicted of having bad habits shall not be invited to any entertainments; that the members of this union shall in no way associate with him, and that he shall be snubbed if met upon the street."

"If a man who has been blacklisted men is his ways, and a committee from the union is satisfied that he no longer has any habits upon which the organization has placed a ban, said blacklist shall be removed, and he shall be eligible to attend any of the entertainments given by the girls belonging to the union or to pay attention to any of said girls."

WHAT IS HOME?

Recently a London magazine sent out 1,000 inquiries on the question, "What is home? In selecting the classes to respond to the question it was particular to see that every one was represented. The poorest and the richest were given an equal opportunity to express their sentiment. Out of the eight hundred replies received, seven gems were selected as follows:

Home—A world of strife shut out, a world of love shut in.

Home—The place where the small are great and the great are small.

Home—The father's kingdom, the mother's world and the child's paradise.

Home—The place where we grumble the most and we are treated the best.

Home—The centre of our affection, round which our heart's best wishes twine.

Home—The place where our stomachs get three square meals daily and hearts a thousand.

Home—The only place on earth where the faults and failings of humanity are hidden under the sweet mantle of charity.
