"I wrote to Doctor Pierce, who sent me a very kind letter and advised me."

Thousands of weak and sick women can trace the beginning of a new life of perfect health to that letter written to Dr. Pierce.

Sick and ailing women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce, by letter, free. All correspondence held as strictly private and sacredly confidential. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures weak and aching backs, headaches, nervousness and other womanly ailments by curing the womanly diseases which cause them.

"In the spring of 1900 I became very ill," writes Mrs. Alvina Scholtz, of Lake Washington, Lesueur Co., Minn., "my back was very weak and ached so that I could do no work at all, so I was obliged to take to my bed. I felt a constant desire to urinate and the pains in my abdomen were almost unbearable. I wrote to Dr. Pierce, who sent me a very kind letter, and advised me to take his 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I took six bottles of each and am a well woman now. I cannot say enough in favor of Dr. Pierce's medicines."

"Favorite Prescription" makes weak women strong, sick women well. Accept no substitute for the medicine which works wonders for weak women.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are the most desirable laxative for delicate women.

HONORED THEIR HERO.

Sunday and in this cemetery of the Parish of I. U., in this county of Kent, Md., and in the Diocese of Easton, is to unveil and to dedicate a monumental grave stone to the Glory of God, and in honorable memory of General Philip Reed, a noble hero of our State and county.

In honoring the dead we are executing a strictly religious duty well worthy of performance on this venerable, holy day.

As the subject-matter of this discourse involves secular considerations in its religious aspect, I desire, with apology to you, indulgence in selecting a text, not from the Bible, but from the works of Shakespeare, and though a text is usually announced at the beginning of a sermon, I hope you will forgive me for announcing it in this place.

My text will be found in the opening sentence of Mark Antony's oration over the dead body of Julius Caesar:

"Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me your ears; I come to bury Caesar, not to praise him; the evil that men do lives after them, the good is oft interred with their bones, so let it be with Caesar."

Close to the base of Pompey's statue, at the Capitol, in the ancient city of Rome, lay the dead body of the "mighty Caesar," deformed with wounds and withering in his gore." He had been assassinated by conspirators. Brutus, one of the conspirators, cried out, as all stood around the body: "Sloop, Romans, stoop, and let us bathe our hands in Caesar's blood up to the elbows, and besmear our swords; then walk we forth, even to the market-place."

To this scene of blood and death came Mark Antony, well-nigh heart-broken by the assassination of his fondly-loved and very dearest friend. He came in fear and trembling, but not until the conspirators had guaranteed to him, by message, the safety of his life. At the sight of the dead and mutilated body of his friend, and in the extremity of his grief, he begged the conspirators to slay him also:

"Live a thousand years," said he to them, I shall not find myself so apt to die; No man will please me so, no mean of death, As here by Caesar, and by you cut off."

The conspirators refused Mark Antony his begged-for boon of death. Instead of killing him, they requested him to convey the dead Caesar to the market-place—the public forum—and there to make an oration to the people over the body.

The conspirators themselves at once repaired to the Forum, and placed Brutus in the "public chair" or "pulpit," to address the people. In his oration, Brutus extolled some of Caesar's good qualities fairly enough, but he laid so great emphasis on the supposed giant quality of his ambition as to grossly insinuate that the evil which would have followed it would have lived after him forever; and that the good which he has done was so dwarfed in comparison, that it would be interred with his bones and be heard of nevermore.

As Brutus was about to close his oration, Antony came into the Forum with Caesar's dead body. Brutus retired and Mark Antony was placed in the pulpit to speak to the people. We have to notice carefully the temper of Antony's audience. It was composed of men who had been swayed by the oratory of Brutus to a favorable consideration of the assassination. Antony was therefore obliged to exercise caution in his speech. He, therefore, with admirable diplomacy, opened his address by apparently agreeing with the sentiments which had been expressed by Brutus, and gave diplomatic utterance to these words:

"Friends, Romans, Countrymen, lend me your ears; I come to bury Caesar, not to praise him; the evil that men do lives after them, the good is oft interred with their bones, so let it be with Caesar."

On the subject-matter on which it is my privilege to deliver an address to you at this time, there is no necessity for any—the least—diplomacy: nor do I need in this case to exercise caution in my speech. I desire to speak in the utmost sincerity, and from a thoroughly open heart.

The words which I am about to say to you now are but a paraphrase of the words used by Mark Antony over Caesar's body. They are words which, I know, will find a responsive,—truthful—and loving, appreciative echo in your own loyal, loving and true hearts. Friends, Americans, countrymen, lend me your ears; I come, not to bury General Philip Reed, but to praise him; the evil which he did does not live after him; the good is not interred with his bones. So it is with General Philip Reed.

It will be, in November, 1902, seventy-three years since the body of our sterling brave and loyal general "was laid to rest." It lies beneath the monumental granite covering which we, on this day, unveil and dedicate to the glory of God, and to the honored memory of the dear old General's imperishable goodness, unswerving loyalty, irreproachable citizenship and heartfelt Christianity.

Time will not permit me to dwell in detail, on the many incidents which might be offered in proof of these assertions. I will attempt only a brief mention.

1st.—That he was a good man, is proved by the fact that he won the heart's love of his neighbors. So much so that when difficulty and trouble assailed him, and his estate was put up by law to be sold, not one man could be found to make an offer for it. So good was he to others that, although his estate was offered for sale three different times, it could not be sold as no one would be a party to dispossess him of his property. Again his goodness is shown by his gratefully affectionate nature as a husband, for here, at his side, are the grave stones of his wives, erected at his own instance, and bearing epitaphs full of the deepest sentiment of esteem and affection. Again, a marked estimation of his goodness is shown, in that his grandson, who was not a member of this parish, year

THEY CRUSH THE POWERS

This is written in mid-October. The long, oppressive summer is quite gone. Fading leaf, withering tree and the rustling corn in the fields are signs of the season. Fog, frost, rain, snow,—they are coming. You remember last winter; of 1900 and 1901. The weather was cruel. All the thousands it killed, and the hundreds of thousands it maimed and crippled. Oh, the rough grasp it laid on men at work, women at home, and children in cribs and cradles. Coughs that began before Thanksgiving Day are racking and tearing them still; yes, and growing worse as they dig deeper into the poor, tired throat and lungs. Many were cured by using Benson's Porous Plasters. For the soothing and healing power of these Plasters is wonderful. They conquer the complaints

THAT ARE KILLING THE PEOPLE.

No other plaster, no other medicine or application, can compare with them. Coughs, colds, backache, rheumatism, lumbago, kidney and liver troubles, asthma, influenza,—they all go down before Benson's Plasters like a snow image in the sun. You can't throw money away on a Benson's Plaster. Everybody is going to use them this season. But make certain you get the genuine. All druggists, or we will prepay postage on any number ordered in the United States on receipt of 25c. each. Seabury & Johnson, Mfg. Chemists, N.Y.
