NEARLY MARRIED.

But the Right Man Turned Up in The Nick of Time.

To tell the truth, I was "cotton dry," and I slipped up to the side of a German studio, for it was Sunday, and rapped. The door was opened by a portly gentleman in a white apron, who shook my hand with every evidence of delight and ushered me into the back room of the studio. Rosy-cheeked German girls sat around the room, and a dozen men dressed in the gray uniform of the Schuetzen Corps were standing around a keg of beer, filling their glasses and emptying them down their throats as if for wager.

I was introduced to everybody in the room, and was wondering what it all meant, when the door leading to the hall opened and a tall, handsome young lady walked in, attended by two girls, all dressed in white. The tall one towered fully a foot above me. She was being heaped with congratulations (my imperfect knowledge of German allowed me to understand;) and then the white-aproned gentleman led her toward me and introduced her to me. I simply bowed, for he had muttered the words of the introduction in German, but I said nothing, nor had I said a word since I entered the place.

The girl took my arm and led me to a seat. Then she gave me a kiss with a smack that sounded like a miniature clap of thunder. I was shocked, not at the kiss, but at the girl's audacity. Everybody giggled and she began to talk to me in German. I could not understand her, so I nodded and kept on nodding until two immense mugs of beer were sent in. She finished her mug before I got through with mine, and then a band, consisting of three German musicians, struck up a waltz. My companion and I joined in the dance.

After several dances a tall, solemn-faced man was ushered into the room. He fixed his eagle eye on me, and I began to think that the mistake as to my identity, which I suspected my entertainers were laboring under, was discovered; but he only smiled and shook hands with me.

I was enjoying myself hugely. I knew that these folks mistook me for somebody else, but I could not for the life of me clear up the mistake, so I went on chuckling inwardly until the white—aproned gentleman beckoned me and my companion toward him. We arose together and the man with the eagle eye planted himself before us. He began fumbling in his coat-tail pocket for something, and at the same moment there was a rap at the door. In bounced a young fellow about as tall as myself, with a bouquet in his buttonhole as big as a plate. He looked at me, and the people looked from one to the other of us. Then I felt myself caught from behind, and I was run out through the yard and thrown through the door into the street.

I was angry, but could not help laughing. I came to the conclusion that the last comer was the young man whom I had mistaken for. The next night I called on the studio-keeper to solve the mystery. He began laughing when he saw me, and it was some minutes before he recovered himself. Then he said:

"I vould nefer haf known it. You vas de young mans dat we take for Carl las' night. Hah! hah! dot vos funny. Carl he haf not sawn Barbara ober yet she vas one sbmall geli. His foder und her foder dey make up dot des got merried. Carl he go on Milvaukee, but Barbara she stay home.

"Barbara she my cousin, las' veek she come here. I send to Carl. He wrote he come las' nacht und marry her. We tink you say nodding because you vas fraid. You can not talk Deutsche?"

"No."

"I thought not. It's all arecht now; Carl he laugh, Barbara laugh. You like to see dem?"

I replied "No," and then we drank their health and enjoyed another good laugh. It was the narrowest escape, though, I ever had from being married.—Denver Times.

Young Men Gambling.

The prevalent craze for gambling in the pool rooms and at the race track has led to the formation of a company in New York, with branches in all the large cities, who make it a business to watch young men who frequent these places. There are hundreds of talented young men out of work who wonder why they cannot secure employment. One reason is that they are "blackballed" by this society; that is, they bet on the races, and merchants who need men to occupy confidential positions do not care to hire gamblers.

This is the end of these young men's carreers. They are possessed of a mania for gambling—of trying to get big returns for a small outlay. Where one man succeeds a thousand fail. This thousand, losing their own money, bouyed up with the hope of retrieving all they have lost, take their employers' cash, only to bring disgrace upon themselves and their families and friends. In the long run it pays to be honest. It pays to work hard for fair wages content to save little by little until enough is saved to invest legitimately. It does not pay to endeavor to get something for nothing for that can't be done, legitimately, honestly and squarely.

To Users of "Fish-Brand" Goods.

The cloth used in our Fish Brand Jackets and Pants has always been of unexcelled strength and durability, but we have just discovered that the mill which has made the cloth for the past ten years has, thro' a mistake, delivered us a small quantity of cloth which is far below our standard. This defect was not known to us until some of the goods had been placed upon the market, and as we intend that the Fish Brand goods shall be the standard for strength, durability and waterproof qualities, we hereby inform all users of these goods that we have authorized every store-keeper handling Fish Brand Oiled Clothing to give at once a new and perfect garment for any that have been torn and are not of the usual strength.

M'CLELLAN AS A RIDER.

He Was One of the Handsomest Men on Horseback in the Federal Service.

Major General George B. McClellan was one of the handsomest men on horseback in the Federal service. He sat in the saddle with a grace and ease peculiarly his own. All his appointments were in the most correct taste, and his horses were full-blooded animals.

Wearing highly polished riding boots coming up nearly to his hips, and wrinkled from the instep to the knee, he would go splashing over the roads until horse, rider and boots were covered with Virginia mud, probably the stickiest substance in existance. His servant, too, always had a clean pair of boots for the general on his return to quarters, after which the man would spend a couple of hours cleaning the other pair. The soldiers at Yorktown used to say that "Little Mac" could collect more mud in an hour's time than any other general in the army.

McClellan wss passionately fond of horses and preferred to have them cold black. No other officer during the war possessed such magnetism over his troops. To see him ride by a moving column was a pleasant experience.

"How is the road, boys?" he would ask genially.

And then the men would cheer as if they had gone crazy.

He was always looking out for cases of distress. At South Mountain, while the army of the Potomac was advancing to Antietam, the General found a wounded man by the roadside. As the poor fellow could not walk McClellan leaped from his saddle and assisted the soldier into it, sending an orderly with him to the hospital.

As McClellan mounted the orderly's horse his chief of staff asked him why he did not send the inferior animal instead of his own.

"Because," replied little Mac, "a general's horse is not too good for a brave and wounded man."

McClellan always rode at a slapping pace, and saw that his staff were well mounted, for nothing more displeases him than their inability to keep up with him. He was very cool on the battlefield and used to ride from point to point in the calmest manner.

Selecting an advantageous position he would survey the field of operations through his glass, the horse under him meanwhile champing and pawing until checked by a motion of the reins. Without attempting the cavalry seat or style McClellan had at all times a perfect command over his charger. His knowledge of horse-flesh is shown by the invention of the McClellan saddle, the easiest for man and beast ever made.

1864 SADLER'S BRYANT & STRATTON COLLEGE BALTO

FOUNDED IN 1864 by the present executive—27 YEARS of continuous and successful management—Increased annual attendance—Now occupying four buildings—Stands unrivaled in facilities for educating YOUNG MEN AND WOMEN for success in life. In deciding upon a school for their children, PARENTS should send them to THE BEST, because it pays. It may require the expenditure of a few dollars more at first, but it will prove the cheapest in the end. CHEAP tuition is very dear, because it means cheap teachers, cheap surroundings, inferior facilities, and offers NO opportunities for securing POSITIONS for its pupils and graduates. This Institution, owing to its HIGH standard of excellence, has placed in desirable positions more young men and women from Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia, than all similar institutions combined. Catalogue and particulars mailed on application.
