HON. GEORGE VICKERS

ONE OF THE GREAT STATESMEN OF MARYLAND.

His Long and Useful Career—His Election to the United States Senate—How It was Brought About—The Fight Over His Admission—Interesting Events in His Life.

Among the many names of men whose illustrious careers have helped to make famous and revered the name of Kent county, Md., that of the late Hon. George Vickers stands out in bold relief and challenges the attention and admiration of all. George Vickers first saw the light of day in Chestertown November 19, 1801. He was the only son of Capt. James Vickers (son of George Vickers and Lydia Tower, of Norfolk county, England, who settled in Kent county) and Ann Davis, of Queen Anne's county. Captain Vickers, the father of George, died in October, 1818, before he reached the age of 32 years. He lost his health in the war of 1812. His wife survived him a few years only, dying in 1827.

The subject of this sketch, whose life reads like a novel, was educated at Washington College, Chestertown, completing the course in 1817. At that time no degrees were conferred at the college. After he had graduated Mr. Vickers was made deputy clerk of Kent County Court, and began the study of law with Judge Spencer, of the Kent county circuit. After his admission to the bar, in 1827, he practiced law in the ancient Masonic Temple now occupied by the KENT NEWS, and in the very office now occupied by State's Attorney William M. Slay, at Court House Green and High-st. Here he continued until 1864, when he built the office now occupied by his son, Harrison W. Vickers, on Court-st., where he conducted his business up to the time of his death.

From an early age Mr. Vickers took a most intense interest in politics. In fact he is described as having been an "old Whig" even in his young days. He voted for Henry Clay and Daniel Webster, and was one of William Henry Harrison's electors. Harrison Wilson Vickers, Mr. George Vickers' distinguished son, who still lives in Chestertown, was, in fact, named after President Harrison, although not born until a number of years after General Harrison's election.

Mr. Vickers was appointed judge of the Circuit Court of Kent county by Gov. Holliday Hicks, and afterward by Gov. Augustus Bradford. These he resigned. In 1861 Governor Hicks also appointed him major-general of the Maryland militia, and he was a member of the Senatorial College of 1835-36. Mr. Vickers was, however, peculiar in one respect. He would not hold office in spite of the oft-repeated entreaties of his friends. He was induced to accept the position of United States Senator in 1868 with great difficulty, after having been elected to the office without his knowledge. Besides this, the only office he ever filled was the unexpired State Senatorship of Daniel Jones, of Kent county, who died in the first session of his term.

Mr. Vickers's involuntary election to the office of United States Senator was in 1868, while the impreachment trial of Gen. Andrew Johnson was impending. Mr. Vickers was elected in Annapolis at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The Chesapeake bay and the Chester river were frozen over, and those who came up to Chestertown on the iceboat Maryland to notify Mr. Vickers of his election reached the home of the unconscious State Senator about 2 A. M., while he was fast asleep.

Although a bold and outspoken Southron Mr. Vickers took a strong interest in the Union, and strongly opposed the secession of Maryland. He belonged to the Constitutional Union party, and not only canvased the Eastern Shore of the State, making speeches against secession, but he wrote numerous pamphlets and leading articles in opposition to the measure. These he published above his name in Kent county and Baltimore city newspapers. When, after some hesitation on the part of his future colleagues, he was allowed to take his seat in the Senate, Mr. Vickers held his own there for five years and a half.

The circumstances attending Mr. Vickers' election are peculiar and deserve rehersal at this point. It appears that Gov. Philip Frank Thomas had been previously elected but had been denied the right to take his seat in the Senate, on the ground of disloyalty, his son having served in the Confederate army. Mr. Vickers, who was then elected in Gov. Thomas's stead, also had a son, Benjamin Clothier Vickers, who was killed at the battle of Shiloh while fighting for the Confederacy. This fact, however, did not weigh with the other members of the United States Senate, on account of Mr. Vickers' pronounced Union principles and he was permitted to take his seat.

Among those who took a stand in favor of his admission were Fressenden, of Maine; Trumbull, of Illionis; Henderson, of Missouri and Grimes, of Iowa, the latter being the father in-law of Allison. These were bitterly opposed by the late Charles Sumner, but were eventually successful and seated their man. During Johnson's trial Mr. Vickers delivered his maiden Senatorial speech and filed his reason for voting "not guilty."

When McClellan ran for the Presidency Mr. Vickers joined the Democratic party, and was one of the Presidential aspirant's most enthusiastic electors.

In 1826 he married Mary Mansfield, of Kent county, the daughter of James Mansfield, a prominent farmer. By her he had seven sons and four daughters. The former, according to age, are as follows: Geo. Jefferson, James Mansfield, William Albert, Benjamin Clothier, Tower, Harrison and Harrison Wilson. The last-named, the only son living, is now a prominent lawyer of Chestertown, Kent county. The surviving daughters are Annette Tower, who married John H. White, cashier of the National Bank of Salisbury, Md., and Clara, the widow of Jefferson Rivers, editor of the Congressional Globe, of Washington, D. C., and William Hartsock, a commission merchant of Baltimore. Mrs. Hartsock is, at present, living with her mother, Mrs. George Vickers, at 1922 McCulloh-st, Baltimore. The latter is in excellent health, although born in 1807.

Senator Vickers, after giving up a political life, returned to Chestertown and the practice of law, and finally died in harness, October 11, 1879, of neuralgia of the heart, contracted while bathing at Cape May. His cash books and ledgers show that while engaged in the practice of law he received from trial fees and trustees' commissions over $600,000.

Senator Vickers was noted for his private charties and for the munificent way in which he provided for his large family. His carts delivered wood at the doors of the houses of all the poor widows of Chestertown every winter. Senator Vickers also took care of the old and infirm among his slaves. He always declared that he never cared for money, being afraid to accumulate it.

To his church Senator Vickers was always liberal. He was reared in the Protestant Episcopal faith, but unaccountably left it in 1835-40, when the Methodist Protestant Church was founded. From that time forward he was prominently identified with the Methodists. In 1862 Senator Vickers presented to his native town the five acres of land for the Chester Cemetery. Prior to this townpeople had always used as a burial-place the tract adjoining Emanuel P. E. Church in Chestertown. Upon this tract the present Kent county court-house was afterward erected, when the bones of many of the forefathers of the citizens of Chestertown were removed to the new burial place. Singularly enough, the mouldering remains of Captain and Mrs. James Vickers were permitted to remain in their first and last resting-place. The new temple of justice soon raised above them, and, standing over all that was mortal of his honored parents, the ex-Senator made many an earnest plea in behalf of his cilents.

While in the Senate Mr. Vickers made speeches on all the consitttutional questions that arose. These were afterwards printed in book form by his son-in-law, Editor Rivers, of the Congressional Globe. His remaining son, Harrison W. Vickers, proposes also to publish ere long, a number of interesting letters received by his father from prominent Whigs, among whom may be mentioned Clay, Webster and J. J. Crittenden. These Mr. Vickers has temporarily placed in the Safe Deposit Company's vaults in Baltimore.

In 1831 or 1832 the subject of this sketch having settled an estate, was forced to, travel to Somerset county to deliver in person the money obtained from the sale of the property. This amounted to several thousands of dollars, all in gold and silver, which were packed in a large valise. The preparations for that trip—a tremendous and risky undertaking for those days—are described as having been more extensive than would be those for a trip around the world in this more enlightened age. The journey was made by sailing packet to Baltimore, whence Somerset county was reached after a rough time he was in the stage Mr. Vickers sat on his precious valise and make the journey in safety with his valued charge.

The zeal and determination of Senator Vickers, when engaged in a righteous cause were never better shown than by his persistent and successful efforts to rid the county of a certain R. Clay Crawford, who came to Chestertown in 1867 and established a rabid organ called the Freedman's Bueau. In his paper Crawford unmercifully attacked every respectable white man in Kent county, and aroused the indignation of all. He armed the negroes, organized them into a military company and marched them up and down High-st. in open defiance of all law-abiding citizens.

Becoming satisfied, through the dicovery of some of Crawford's many dishonest transactions, that he had a history, Senator Vickers began investigations, and discovered that the man had been a colonel in the First Tennessee Artillery during the war, had been court-martialed and dismissed from the Federal army for horse stealing, and had afterward been sentenced to seven years in the Virginia State penitentiary for a flagrant act of larceny, but had managed to escape. He also unearthed many other discrditable facts in Crawford's life. Senator Vickers attacked the man though the columns of the recognized county paper of that day, and opened up a correspondent with the then Governor of Virginia and the officials of the penitentiary of that State.

Meanwhile Crawford hired colored thugs who knocked down and brutally maltreated Senator Vickers on his way to his office in Chestertown. Finally, after long and persistent entreaties, the officials of the Virginia penitentiary started for Chestertown on the strength of the description of Crawford furnished by the Senator, with the intention of arresting the escaped convict. But Crawford got wind of their intention, and when the officers arrived they found that their bird had flown. He was never seen again. Thus did Senator Vickers, single-handed, rid Kent county of an arrant knave, a public nuisance and a desperate and unprincipled adventurer.

HOUSEKEEPERS' HELP.

Some Nice Things to Eat.

A CHOCOLATE SANDWICH.—Place a layer of freshly grated chocolate between two slices of bread and butter. There should be plenty of the chocolate and it should be freshly grated.

ORANGEADE.—Take the thin peel of two oranges and one lemon; add the water and sugar the same as for lemonade; when cold add the juice of one lemon and of four or five oranges and strain off.

FRITTERS.—Three eggs, two teaspoonfuls of sugar, one pint of sour milk, one teaspoonful of soda, a pinch of salt, flour enough to make stiff batter. Beat thoroughly, drop a large spoonful in hot lard, fry brown and roll in powdered sugar when done.

LEMON JELLY.—Take half a dozen lemons, squeeze the juice into a quart of water, in which dissolve an ounce of gelatine; boil five minutes, strain, color with fruit coloring, add a pound of sugar, and set on the stove until dissolved. Stir again, pour in fancy moulds and set on ice.

NEWMARKET PUDDING.—One pint grated bread, one quart milk, one cup sugar, one tablespoonful butter, four eggs (yolks). Soak the bread one hour. When baked add a layer of Jelly over the top, then cover with a meringue made of the whites of eggs and half a cup of sugar. Brown slightly.

TO REMOVE PAINT STAINS.—Saturate the paint spot on a wool dress with spirits of turpentine, and let it remain several hours, when, by rubbing the spot between the hands, the paint will crumble away from the fabric. The turpentine will soon evaporate. If not successful at the first time, repeat the application, rubbing several times.

MARGUERETTES.—Beat one pound of butter and sugar each together with the yolks of six eggs; mix in one and a half pounds of flour, one glass of rose water, and one table spoonful of mixed spices; roll out half an inch thick, cut in cakes and bake quickly; when cold spread with jelly, and then with lemon icing. Set in the oven to brown.

WHITE FRICASSEED CHICKEN.—Cut a chicken in pieces, wash it and season with pepper and salt. Put in a stewpan with a little water and let it stew till nearly done; then add a teacup of cream and some butter rolled in flourto thicken the gravy. If the chicken is fat very little butter is necessary. Mace or nutmeg may be added if you like spice.

SOFT WAFFLES.—Beat two eggs without seperating until very light; add to them one half pint of milk; now add two tablespoonfuls of butter that has been softened, but not melted, and two cups of flour. Beat thoroughly for about five minutes, then add one heaping teaspoonful of baking powder; beat again and they are ready to bake. Dust with powered sugar and serve hot.

BAKED POTATOES WITH DUMPLINGS.—Pare and wash the potatoes, make some good paste into balls about the same size as the potatoes, and place them alternately with the potatoes in a pie dish, previously buttered; add a little onion finely chopped, and sufficient water to about half fill the dish; season with pepper and salt, which should be mixed with the water; cover with a flat dish and bake them.

CHICKEN PATES.—Chop meat of cold chicken fine, season with salt, make a large cupful of rich drawn butter, and while on the fire add two hard boiled eggs minced fine, a little chopped parsley, and the meat of a chicken; let this mixture almost boil, have ready some pate pans of good rich paste, remove the covers with the edge of a knife, fill in with the mixture and arrange on a hot platter. In baking the crust it is a good plan to fill in with a square of stale bread, which is easily removed as soon as it comes from the oven. This keeps the crust from falling flat, as it would otherwise do without the chicken mixture.
