A Romantic Wedding.

Rev. Dr. L. E. Barrett, pastor of the Chestertown M. E. Church performed one of the most romantic wedding ceremonies last Sunday night ever performed in this section. About ten o'clock that night just as the pastor and his wife were preparing to retire after the duties of the sacred day had been done, the door bell at the parsonage rang and upon going to the door the pastor found four ladies and gentleman, two of whom were Mr. Louis Vane and Miss Emma Leager, both of Queen Anne's county. Dr. Barrett invited his guests into the parlor and asked what he could do for them at that late hour of the night. Mr. Vane stated that he and Miss Leager wanted to be married, and forthwith pulled a marriage license from his pocket and handed it to the pastor. Upon reading it Dr. Barrett discovered that the license was issued in Queen Anne's county. He told the couple that he could not perform the ceremony as the license was issued in Queen Anne's, and they would have to get a Queen Anne's minister to tie the knot. The couple was very much dismayed and Mr. Vane said: "We have driven five or six miles here, and it is too late to seek a Queen Anne's minister now." The good pastor took in the situation and said: "Well, I tell you what I'll do. If you are willing, we will go to the Queen Anne's side of Chester bridge, and when I am sure we have reached Queen Anne's territory, I'll perform the ceremony." This was agreed to at once, and the young lady who was to act as best girl said: "That is fine, for you know it is bad luck to postpone a wedding." They hurriedly got in their carriages, taking the parson along, and when they reached Queen Anne's territory on the bridge, they alighted. All of a sudden the thought struck the pastor that he could not see to read the ceremony unless he had a light. Because of his frequent strolls on the bridge, Dr. Barrett knew where the bridge-keeper hid his ladder. He procured this and climbed up on the draw and took down one of the signal lights. He commanded the best man to hold the light, and there on Chester bridge, with the stars above and the Chester beneath as witnesses, by the light of the lantern, the only wedding ceremony ever performed on Chester bridge took place amid the most romantic surroundings. The groom paid the bill, and thanked the pastor and they went on their way rejoicing. The pastor replaced the light and ladder, went home and to bed, thinking of how romantically he had made two hearts beat as one. He went to conference next day, preached the missionary sermon on Tuesday evening, and who knows but that the pastor used the romantic wedding as an illustration of the importance of "carrying the light to those who are in darkness."

There Will be Peaches.

State Horticulturist C. A. McCue, of the Delaware College farm station, has made an examination of the buds of all varieties of peaches growing on the college farm, and he finds these results among the varieties best known to Kent growers:

Variety.	Per Centage of Living Buds.
Alexander	38
Bilyeu's Ooctober	42
Bear's Smock	43
Carmen	59
Crawford's Early	6
Crawford's Late	2
Chair's Choice	10
Early Rivers	38
Elberta	24
Foster	1
Heath Cling	45
Mountain Rose	4
Old Mixon	32
Ray	3
Reeves' Favorite	12
Smock Cling	35
Stump	33
Troth Early	62
Yellow St. John	6

The trees in many localities are said to be so full of buds that even with this percentage of live buds there will be a fine crop of peaches on the Maryland-Delaware peninsula, notwithstanding the zero weather of the past winter.

Farmers' Institute.

Successful institutes for the farmers of Sassafras, Kennedyville and Chestertown were held on Saturday Monday and Tuesday in charge of Dr. Richard S. Hill, director of Farmers' Institutes. At each place the meetings were largely attended, and the subjects discussed were of interest and of importance to our farmers. Among those who addressed the Chestertown institute were: Prof. Toliaferro, of the Maryland Agricultural Experiment Station, who discussed "seed corn and drainage," Mr. Oswald, of Hagerstown, who talked on spraying, apple growing, and poultry, and Mr. Haswell, government expert, on drainage. Dr. Hill also gave several very interesting talks. The sessions were graced by the presence of a number of ladies interested in the subject of farming.

Prohibition Convention.

Not an Anti-Saloon convention, but a spirited, inspiring and record-breaking Prohibition party State convention was held in Baltimore Feb. 23. The intense zeal and earnestness of the members of the convention emphasized a purpose of aggression and argued well for a greatly increased vote. The convention elected Mr. M. A. Toulson delegate and Mr. G. W. Covington alternate to attend the Prohibition National Convention to be held in Atlantic City, N.J., July next. Mr. F. M. Bottomly was elected member of the State Central Committee. The "Battle Cry," the official organ of the Prohibition party, in Maryland, contained an excellent account of the convention.
