The local order is composed of eighty-one members, and consists of many of the most prominent people of this community. The meeting was opened by singing the opening ode, followed by prayer by Dr. L. E. Barrett. Mr. William E. Newsome made an address, introducing the chairman, Prof. Jefferson L. Smyth, and welcoming the guests in their midst. Prof. Smyth then spoke, making many good points, and finally introducing the speaker of the evening, State Deputy Head Consul William McCaffery. Mr. McCaffrey made quite a lenghly address, telling the history of the Modern Woodmen, saying that it was thirth-one years old, had over a million members. He said it was the greatest organization of its kind on earth. Mr. McCaffrey spoke nearly an hour and said, in the course of his remarks, that he intended making this one of the livest camps on the Shore. The Modern Woodmen are in good financial condition and many new members will probably result from the visit of the State Deputy Head Consul. COW-TESTING PAYS HIGH RATE INTEREST

Maryland Dairyman More Than Doubles His Returns Per Cow In One Year.

G. W. WOLCOTT.
Maryland Agricultural Experiment Station.

James W. Beacham, Jr., of Avondale, began testing his herd of 26 cows in June, 1910. The average cost of feeding one cow during the first year of testing was $51.80 and the profit $22.93 per head. By the end of this year he had disposed of 9 cows as unprofitable. As a result during the second year of the test, the increased value of the milk per cow was $72.42, while the price of milk was only 2 cents higher.

A RECORD BREAKER.

So the average profit per cow instead of being $22.92 as in the first year jumped to $76.79 or an increase in profit per cow of $53.86, the increase alone being double the original profit. These results were secured simply by testing the cows for production, and selling the unprofitable or boarder cows.

Of course, a dairyman, with special training can make his own tests and get his own conclusions. Better results come, however, to the average dairyman from helping to form a Cow-Testing Association, whereby a trained tester can be employed at a cost of $1 per cow a year to make regular calculations of feed used and milk produced. In such a case, the tester who is usually an agricultural college graduate, arrives at the farm in the afternoon. That evening he weighs and takes a sample of each cow's milk. The next morning, he again weighs and samples the milk of each cow. After the morning milking, he tests the samples of milk for fat according to the Babcock method.

The tester also weighs the feed consumed by each cow, and estimates the cost. So after he determines the value of the milk or fat, he is able to calculate the profit or loss per cow for the month. Further than this, he calculates the returns yielded for one dollar expended for feed; also the cost of producing 100 pounds of milk and one pound of butter fat for that month. He leaves a copy of his records with the owner of the herd and then goes on to the next farm. Fuller accounts of methods of cow-testing will be found in the Maryland Experiment Station Bulletin No. 169, which may be had for the asking.

OPEN DAIRY BARN FOUND A WINNER

Pennsylvania Dairyman Enthusiastic Over Maryland Fresh Air Stable.

L. W. Lightly, of Adams county, converted by a visit to the Maryland Experiment Station, writes as follows: "The cold, open barn for the dairy cow is a bitter dose to an old dairyman, but maybe he might as well take it and be done with. At the Maryland Station their stable is not only open in front, but open on three sides. A protecting wall nearly five feet high goes all the way around, with an open space of over three feet above it, the whole being covered with a good roof. The cows are loose in this covered pen with nothing in the way of fixtures and with plenty of dry bedding. Here they spent all the winter except that, when being milked, they are put in a clean, comfortable milking room.

"Close by is an old style closed barn with windows, ventilators, etc., up to date. The cows in the open stable produced more milk at less cost than the cows in the warm stable and the milk from the open stable graded higher because it was cleaner. Even in the winter of 1911-12, with its extra severity the open stable cows were ahead in profitable production. That is what the cow says about the open air cow stable, compared with the closed one, and the cow, after all, is the final authority in spite of ideas or theories." The saving in manure and the lessened cost of caring for the open barn cow are worth knowing about also. Write for Maryland Experiment Station free Bulletin No. 177.

No State In the Union Has As Good Markets.

The consumers should pay less for food and the producers get more for their products than at present. Co-operation between buyer and seller will make this possible.

More profit in farming will attract settlers and increase land values.

The water-power that is going to waste on thousands of Maryland farms should be harnessed and made to lighten and do much of the farm labor.

Maryland should rank first as a State of prosperous farms and pleasant homes.

Her 200,000 growing boys and girls are entitled to as good educational facilities as other States provide for their children. They should be trained to make the most of these possibilities.
