

MUST SHIP MORE MEAT OVERSEAS SUPPLY IS SHORT

Washington.—To meet the needs of the American and Allied Armies and the civilian populations of France, Great Britain and Italy the American people is asked by the Food Administration to place themselves on a limited beef allowance until September 15.

Householders are requested not "under any circumstances" to buy more than one and one-half pounds, including the bone, for each person in the household.

Hotels and restaurants are asked not to serve boiled beef more than two meals weekly, beefsteak more than one meal weekly, and roast beef more than one meal weekly.

"The demand for beef for our army, the armies of the Allies and their civilian populations for this summer," says the Food Administration's announcement, "are beyond our present surplus. On the other hand, we have enough increased supply of pork this summer to permit economical expansion in its use. It, therefore, will be a direct service in our armies, and the Allies if our people will in some degree substitute fresh pork, bacon, ham and sausage for beef products.

"The public will realize that the changing conditions of production from season to season, the changing situation in shipping, and, therefore, of the markets available to the Allies, and the increasing demand for our growing Army, with the fluctuating supplies of local beef in France, all make it impossible to determine policies for a long period in advance. We have recently asked for economy in all meat consumption; we wish now to emphasize further reduction of beef by the substitution of pork. It is anticipated that this program will hold good until September 15, and the co-operation of the public is most earnestly requested."

SO HUNGRY FOR FATS SAMMIES EAT VASELINE.

You can give material to make American shells with just a little thought.

By using every bit of fat on all meat, fowl or fish your demand for fats on the market is lessened. This releases just that much animal fat for munition making.

The average citizen does not know that fats are the foundation of that deadly explosive, nitro-glycerin. Neither does he realize that fats alone of all food elements supply the enormous amount of energy required to carry on the deadly work of war.

We must feed our boys fats or they will not have that last minute drive that is so necessary to success in battle.

The ordinary person doing a normal day's work can get along with a small amount of fatty food. His system does not require the intense heat that the oxidation of fat throws off.

But the soldier who spends his life in a water-filled ditch, without sleep, awaiting the moment when he should be called upon to cross No Man's Land, needs every heat calorie that can be generated in his tired body, and fats alone will answer this purpose.

A Red Cross nurse, visiting her family in America, made the assertion that unless put under lock and key, vaseline, cold cream and all other oily substances soon disappear, to be devoured by some soldier hungry for fats.

But it is not only for the feeding of the human organism that we who stay at home must do with less fat. The base of nitro-glycerin, so necessary in war of artillery, is glycerin, and glycerin can only be made through the reduction of fats.

CORNMEAL PUFFS.

One quart milk, one-half cup cornmeal, four tablespoons syrup, one-half teaspoon nutmeg, six eggs.

Bring milk to boil, stir meal, sugar and nutmeg and boil five minutes—stirring constantly. Allow mixture to cool, then stir in the eggs beaten very light. Place in custard cups and bake 30 minutes in a moderate oven. Serve with lemon sauce or fresh fruit sauce.

"If a few runner beans are planted on the cabbage patch, snapbeans will give but little trouble."
Daily Paper.

Sauerkraut by any other name would be a splendid war food, and, therefore, Herbert Hoover urges that its use should not be curtailed by "over-zealous and ill-advised patriotism."

Lie-abeds in hotels, etc., are hit by the Canadian Food Board. They must break their fast by 10.30, or wait until the officially set time for the midday meal.

As soon after birth as possible food and meat cards are issued to British infants, so that their rations may become an extra allowance for the mothers.

One week without wheat will show how easy it is.

ARE YOU GOING TO EAT TOUGH ROOTS NEXT WINTER?

Simple Dehydrating Devices Will Dry The Water Out Of Fresh Vegetables Which Can Then Be Stored In Small Space Without Risk Of Decay.

Why should countless Americans eat tough, old root vegetables in the winter time when they could almost as easily have fresh, tender ones? And why do most of the others push up the High Cost of Living by buying vegetables in a form which necessitates shipping around the country millions of gallons of water? The reason is that they use only a little more foresight than the squirrel who hides away nuts for the winter, and will not take the little extra trouble which would make vegetables, fruits, milk, and even eggs equally storable. "Dehydration," the method by which this is done, is so simple a way of "drying" that it was practiced in ancient Egypt and savage Africa. Even the old-time Redskins were more up-to-date in this regard than thousands of Maryland housewives. That is why the Government is so anxious to spread the gospel of "dehydration" at a time when war is being waged on all kinds of waste—waste of vegetables, waste of money, waste of cans, waste of storage room, and waste of railroad facilities.

There has been installed at the War Food Bureau, Lexington Building, Baltimore, a modern drying plant which gives daily demonstrations and soon will be put on a commercial basis. It will reduce vegetables three or four-fifths of their volume without impairing their form, flavor, or fragrance—by the simple process of drawing out the water-content which in some vegetables is in greater proportion than even in milk! Dwellers in flats and small homes where there is little storage space will find this reduction in volume a Godsend. And the price of next winter's menu will be less because of the prudent purchase of vegetables at a time when they were plentiful and, therefore, cheap.

The New York plant, which was the pioneer community drier in this country—Germany has over 2,000—involved an initial cost of $1,500 and with volunteer workers will dry a half-ton of material daily at an operating cost of one-third cent a pound. The output takes up one-tenth the room of the original commodity. It cannot be injured by summer's heat or winter's cold.

The Baltimore plant, too, is able to handle big quantities, but a home-made equipment of a few little chicken-wire trays will serve in private homes. With a small stove, some trays, and the help of a young daughter and a farm-boy, one Baltimore woman put up five hundred pounds of dried vegetables from a farm. By adding a ton or so of water as needed, she put her household where railroad tie-ups or the high price of tin and glass could not reach it. "I just used commonsense," she explained, "put the sliced vegetables a few feet above the stove where they were dried—all they were dry. Then I put them in muslin bags and stored them in a dry place. It is, of course, the presence of moisture that allows the forces of decay to operate. When the vegetables were required they were simply soaked in fresh water till they regained their former volume. Then cooked, they were found as tasty as ever and in some cases even better than new."

Dehydration of war-garden products has carried the enemy through three years of war. Maryland is now the scene of the biggest garden contest ever arranged in this continent. If the housewives will grasp this simple dehydrating idea, this State and each community in it can become self-supporting next winter. There will be no need to worry over transportation tangles. Indeed, the trains, instead of carting around millions of gallons of water, will be able to apply more motive power to hauling coal.

All round there will be saving instead of waste. And in addition, there will be fresh, palatable vegetables instead of tough, old roots to make our wheat-saving diet a delight as well as a service. Every woman who can visit the drying plant at the War Food Bureau should learn there how to get pleasing winter meals at lower cost than poor ones. For those who cannot reach Baltimore there is ample dehydrating literature issued free by the Department of Agriculture, Washington.

SUGARLESS GINGER BREAD.
(Official recipe.)

Two cupsful flour, one-and-a-half teaspoonfuls soda, one tablespoon ginger, one-quarter teaspoonful salt, one cupful molasses, one cupful thick sour milk, one egg.

Mix and sift the dry ingredients, add molasses, milk and egg and beat well. Pour into a greased pan and bake in a moderate oven twenty-five minutes.

The need of easily transported food in military operations is shown by the failure of the Japs to stop the Huns in Siberia because of scarcity of rice. Our army is working on a wheat basis to push the Huns out of France. Maryland must help save and ship that wheat.
