WHAT ARE THE CENTURIES TO THEE?

From The Christian Advocate

What are the centuries to thee?
O flaming sun,
Whose form is fire, whose path is light,
Whose beamings usher out the night,
Bringing bright morn,
What are the centuries to thee?

What are the centuries to thee?
Refulgent moon,
Thou radiant mistress of the night,
Streaming o'er earth thy luster bright,
Thy face so fair,
What are the centuries to thee?

What are the centuries to thee?
O ocean wide,
Whose bosom flecked with glistening sail
Or fretted by the maddened gale
Unfathomed deeps,
What are the centuries to thee?

What are the centuries to thee?
O ambient air,
Enswathing earth with robe unseen,
Without whose warmth no life had been,
Old earth a waste,
What are the centuries to thee?

What are the centuries to thee?
O mountains high,
Whose crests the mighty storms have marred,
Whose lightnings flash and thunders heard,
Thyself unmoved,
What are the centuries to thee?

What are the centuries to thee?
O valleys low,
In emerald verdure's rare array,
Where sparkling streamlets laugh their way
Toward the open esa,
What are the centuries to thee?

What are the centuries to thee?
Our quest is vain,
Earth's myriad tongues make no reply.
No voice from land, or sea, or sky,
To still my heart.
What are the centuries to thee?

What are the centuries to thee?
O God supreme,
Whose open hand flings out the years.
Whose might a universe uprears,
Thyself unknown,
What are the centuries to thee?

What are the centuries to thee?
God makes reply;
The answer to my heart is given,
That thrills me with the hope of heaven;
Immortal soul,
What are the centuries to thee?

For thee the endless aeons move
That thou mayst live
Redeemed by Him who died for thee
To set thine imprisoned spirit free
O heir of God,
The centuries are for thee, for thee.

What are the centuries to thee?
My heart's at ease.
Through ages vast my song I'll raise,
In loftiest notes of grateful praise,
For answer given:
The centuries are for thee, O soul, for thee.

A GREAT DUCKING PLACE

Ringgold's Point Farm, Haven For Wild Animals Of All Kinds Known In This Section, Leads Them All As A Shooting Place For The Wonderful Canvasback

There are many shooting places in Kent County, where ducks are plentiful at times, and where good sport is enjoyed by the owners, but there is no doubt that Ringgold's Point Farm, owned by Mr. Walter B. Strong, and Mr. W. G. Smyth, lying in the Fifth Dist. of Kent County, near Rock Hall, leads them all, not only in the number of ducks that prefer this section as a feeding place, but also in the variety of ducks that visit the feeding grounds off this farm every year. There is never a year when ducks are not to be had there of every kind. Chief among them, however, is the wonderful canvasback duck, the king-premier of them all, and, by the way, the aristocrat wherever ducks are mentioned in any part of the world. Some have said that the great City of Baltimore has given Maryland a name that has become world-wide, and this may not be exaggerated; others have contended, with vigor, that the tremendous and classic sweep of the broad Chesapeake, with almost boundless expanse of water and fish, has made Maryland a place in the sun; others have contended that Maryland mountains, with their granite shafts piercing the blue several thousands of feet, have given this state her renown. All these may be true, but lovers of ducking have brought forward the claim that the canvasback duck has made this great state's place unchallenged, and their claim may not be without its just merits.

This year has not been an exception to years that have past in the great numbers of these famous ducks that have been seen and killed at this place. Since the beginning of the season there has hardly been a day when numbers that have been almost illimitable have been seen feeding [illegible] their favorite haunts, and the me[illegible] of the Ringgold Point Ducking [illegible]e killed ducks to their heart'[illegible]-most at will. On Friday [illegible] killed eighty-one canva[illegible] hours and fifteen minutes, while one day recently they killed 188 ducks in one day, 146 of which were canvasbacks. This shows how plentiful the famous ducks are in this section.

Not only is Ringgold's Point Farm one of the greatest ducking places in the state, but it is perhaps the greatest game haven in Kent County or the Eastern Shore. This beautiful stretch of woodland, marsh, brier patch and shore front is the refuge of every kind of game known in this section of the state. It consists of 265 acres. Part of it is thickly wooded, where rabbits, foxes, pheasants, squirrels and woodcock roam at will. The great marsh is alive with muskrats, who build their numberless beds and rear their young in the solitude of an almost primeval wilderness. Beautiful pheasants, turned out by the owner during the past few years, walk majestically and fearlessly through the almost untrodden wilderness part of the farm; quail nest and rear their offspring by the hundreds, while the elusive fox builds his secure refuge in bank and hillside.

This wonderful tract is a great place for the propagation of game of all kinds, and were it not for such places, game of the most sought-after kinds would become extinct on the Eastern Shore in a few years.

To Be Sunk With Naval Honors

Suggestion that one of the American battleships to be scrapped under the naval limitation program be escorted to sea by the Atlantic fleet and sunk with flags flying and full naval honors has been received with approval by high naval officials. While no definite plans for the scrapping of the ships will be undertaken, at least until the treaty has been signed, it was indicated that such a ceremony as suggested probably would be included. A veteran of the navy would be selected, it was said, if it was decided to carry out the formal naval ceremony of farewell to the ships that are to be destroyed.

The oldest of the second line battleships is the Kentucky, first commissioned May 15, 1900, and which went out of commission May 29, 1920, after 20 years and 14 days of [illegible] service in the navy. If [illegible] ceremonial sinking is carried out, it seems likely that the Kentucky would be the ship designated to receive these honors intended to represent the pride of the navy and of the American people in the work that has been done through the years by all of the old battleships that now are to be destroyed.

—John's Hopkins Univ. has been challenged by the University of Maryland to a student debate, to be held [illegible]ring.
