SECOND CHOICE PUZZLING

Information That Will Help Kent Voters Solve A Perplexing Question

Because of the complexity of the second-choice provisions of the Primary Election law, which may be invoked in the three-cornered Democratic Senatorial fight, election officials and party workers are having great difficulty in understanding what must be done under the law. Numerous inquiries have been received by state officials.

The underlying principle of the law is that a choice must be made by a majority instead of by a plurality. That rule applies equally in determining the choice of a political unit—that is, a county or a legislative district—and in determining the final result of the choice of all the units.

In any given county—say Somerset—following the election, the official must determine the first choice of a majority of those who voted in the Democratic primary, and then the second choice, for the guidance of the delegates from the county to the state convention.

Procedure Explained

If there are 5000 votes cast and Candidate A gets 3000, Candidate B gets 1500 and Candidate C 500, there is no question that the delegation from the county is instructed to vote for Candidate A as the first choice. He will have a clear majority. There will remain the matter of determining the county's second choice.

That will come in this way: Candidate A, the high man, will be eliminated. Under the law those who voted for Candidate A for first choice should vote for Candidate B or Candidate C for second choice.

Suppose that of the 3000 who voted for Candidate A, 1500 favored Candidate B for second choice and 1500 favored Candidate C. In that case, 1500 votes would be added to the first choice votes given both Candidates B and C, so that Candidate B would have a total of 3000 and Candidate C a total of 2000. Candidate B, therefore, would have the majority of second-choice votes.

In Event Of No Majority

That illustrates the procedure if one of the candidates has had a clear majority for first choice. If of 5000 votes cast in the county Candidate A had 2400, Candidate B had 2000 and Candidate C had 600, there would be no first choice indicated—only a plurality result. Thereupon, the low man would be eliminated, and the second choices of those who voted for him distributed.

Assume that of the 600 who voted for Candidate C, as first choice, 400 favored Candidate A as second choice and 200 favored Candidate B. By adding that 400 to the 2400 given Candidate A in the first place, he would have a total of 2800 votes, and a clear majority of the 5000 cast, and would become the first choice of the county. Candidate B with 200 added to his original 2000, would have a total of 2200, and would become the second choice.

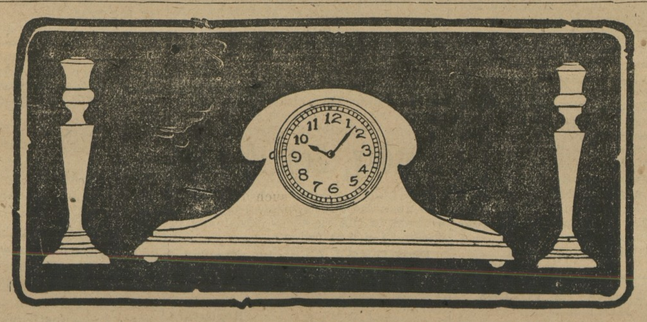

Enters With Instructions

By applying these rules the delegation from each county will enter the state convention with definite instructions as to its first and second choices. If any of the three candidates for the nomination for Senator had a clear majority of all the delegates in the convention, that is, 67 or more, as the first choice, all would be over. But if no candidate had a clear majority, then the second choice would be resorted to.

That would be done in this way: The low man among the candidates would be eliminated. Suppose he had, on the first choice, the delegations from three counties. Each of those delegations would recall that it was instructed, under the procedure outlined above, as to second choices. Necessarily the second choice would be one of the two remaining candidates. Each of these delegations would vote according to the second-choice instructions given it.

And, there being but two candidates, one would have eonugh from his original first choices, plus the second choices given him by delegates of the eliminated candidate, to have a majority of all the delegates in the state convention.

MUST THE COUNTIES BE DISINHERITED?

Is Baltimore city governing Maryland, and shall she continue?

Having about half of the population of the State and occupying a restricted area, Baltimore has been seeking and has been successfully grabbing most of the important governing offices while the twenty-three counties, with a great diversity of interests and an extensive territorial area, only have minority representation so far as important offices are concerned. The efforts of the city to dominate in this respect has been all the more successful since the rest of the state has not realized Baltimore's attempt to rule Maryland.

Here are the facts:

There are four candidates for the United States Senate from Baltimore—William I. Norris, William Cabell Bruce, Joseph I. France and John W. Garrett.

There is one candidate for the United States Senate from the counties—David J. Lewis, of Allegany county.

When the books were closed the last-minute entry was picked by Baltimore politicians—William Cabell Bruce.

Baltimore now has the Governor, Treasurer, Secretary of State and actually both United States Senators.

These facts speak. It is obviously unfair that one city in a State shall rule a whole State. Since there are men in the counties of Maryland fully as capable as those in Baltimore, the counties of Maryland should have proportionate share in the State's rule. Representative government exists in this country, but does representative government exist in a state where one city has all the power of government?

The duty of the counties is to secure proper representation in their own government.

A situation now exists for their action.

David J. Lewis is an unusually capable man, of tested legislative ability, of strong sympathies, open to suggestion and firm in his established purposes for the good of the individual, the State and the nation. He is the proper and logical man to represent the State in the United States Senate.

Support of Mr. Lewis will indicate that the counties are awakening to their danger and duty, and the counties MUST show that they do not intend to be disinherited by Baltimore City.

Isn't it time the rest of Maryland had a chance?

The time and place to settle this question is at the primaries, Monday, September 11.
