REPUBLICAN POLITICS

Armstrong To Wage Hard Fight In Coming Gubernatorial Election—A. Parks Rasin Mentioned For Comptrollership

Candidates whose names are being discussed in city political circles for running mates of Attorney-General Aleander Armstrong, Republican Gubernatorial candidate, are men who are said by political leaders to be closer to the Weller and Goldsborough faction than they are to the Jackson-Lowndes-Broening wing of the party.

There has been some discussion of the possibility of a compromise on the ticket, but from well informed sources it was learned that the distinctly anti-Weller leaders are taking an attitude of indifference toward the coming fall election.

They are going to line up behind Armstrong willingly, but they are show ing no disposition to dicker with Senator Weller or any of his followers over the other places on the ticket.

An out-and-out Weller man who is a member of the city committee, mentioned some of the candidates in the field. He spoke of Fred P. Adkins, of Salisbury; Thomas Bartlet, of Easton. and A. Parks Rasin, of Kent county, now a Deputy Collector of internal Revenue. as possible candidates for the Comptrollership.

Adkins was lined up with his brother, E. Dale Adkins, last summer in a violent fight on National Committeeman W. P. Jackson and Senator France. It is reported that this Adkins now is friendly with Jackson. However, anti-Weller leaders in the city when told of the Adkins proposal said they believed that Jackson was more interested in fishing at Loon Lake than picking candidates.

It has been generally passed about that the Comptrollership would go to a Jackson man. Bartlett is related to the Baltimore Bartletts, who were with J. Garrett in last year's election. Rasin is a job holder under Collector of Internal Revenue Galen L. Tait.

As for the Attorney-Generalship, the names of C. L. Merriken ,Vernon Cook and W. C. Coleman are mentioned. Merriken and Cook have never been identified with any particular faction. Coleman is an out-and-out follower. it is pointed out, of former Governor Goldsborough, who is now siding with Senator Weller in the Armstrong candidacy. There is no concession made to either City Solicitor Roland R. Marchant or former Mayor William F. Broening by Weller followers in the general discussion of possible candidates. An anti-Weller man said today that he thought that Broening was "also fishing," so far as the candidates were concerned.

John F. Mudd, of Charles county, and former Sen. W. F. Chesley are being mentioned for Clerk of the Court of Appeals. These men are more or less identified with the Southern Maryland faction that looks to Jackson for leadership.

It is understood that a conference may be sought soon on the Arm- July on the Fourth of July on the Armstrong running mates. The opposition to Armstrong is not to be found. Even W. Bladen Lowndes, who is one of Weller's bitterest opponents, is reconciled to the Armstrong candidacy.

However, with all the harmony that appears on the surface over the Governorship, it is a well-established fact that the city and Western Maryland and Southern Maryland counties may be the scene of bitter fights for party control over the State Central Committee. It is reported that General Lowndes and former Senator France are preparing to back financially a bitter fight on Weller candidates for this committee. Mr. Lowndes is also expected to make other fights in Howard county. his own county ,and in Carroll county. Reno S. Harp is already preparing to fight the Weller faction in Frederick county, Henry Holtsapfel is preparing to make a fight on the Weller faction in Wasihngton county. On teh Eastern Shore, Jackson. for the promise of another term as National Committeeman,is not expected to make any fight. These counties are expected to elect committeemen who will sanction the re-election of Chairman Tait, it was said.

CORN OUR OLDEST CROP

Development Of Its Growth Has Greatly Increased Its Production And Brought Larger Yields

Corn was the earliest cultivated crop on the American farm. The Indians were producing it and preparing various foods from it when the first colonists settled on the Atlantic seaboard.

The area of corn has steadily increased in the United States from 1886 to the present time. being about three times as large now as at the beginning of this period.

Corn is the most important single crop grown in both Maryland and Delaware. And production depends, of course. both upon the acre yield and upon th area planted. But the fluctuations in production from year to year are almost solely due to variations in yield. The tendency at the present time is to increase the average yield rather than the acreage.

Relatively very low yields occur from time to time. In Maryland the lowest yield was 20.2 bushels in 1869, and 14.4 bushels in Delaware in 1881. In the entire period for which statistics of average annual yields are available—56 years—Maryland's highest yield was 41 bushels in 1919 and Delaware's 37.5 in 1920. But in Maryland it is not at all uncommon for individual farms on good soil and operated according to modern methods to report from 75 to 100 bushels to the acre. In 1922 four counties of Maryland out of o total of 23 in this state—Carroll, Frederick, Harford and Howard—averaged 50 bushels and upwards to the acre.

Average annual yields in Maryland are somewhat better than in Delaware. During the past 20 years the average in the former state has been 35.8 bushels against 31.8 in th latter.

Between 1870 and 1895 only once in Maryland did the average annual yield go above 30 bushels and most of that period it was below 25; while in Delaware only once did the yield go above 30 bushels and most of the time it was nearer 20. The trend of the acre yields in both states since 1910 has been upwards, probably due for the most part to better cultural methods and an understanding on the part of the farmers of the importance of selecting good seed.

Straight Sailing
By The Bentztown Bard

Straight sailing into sunshine,
And what dark sea shall know
The tempest of unending wrath
Where only storm-winds blow?
Last ports, and then the open.
And life's young dreams again
On those fair seas where argosies
Are but the hopes of men!
No veering and no turning.
Straight on, no going back—
And always in the templed sky
The love that points the track.
Oh, Captain, mind the compass.
And bring us safely through
Who lean upon the spray-kist rail
And pray as seamen do!
Pray in all wind and weather—
As white sails did and gleam—
For islands of the coast of youth
And the lost ports of dream!

Changed Telephone Numbers

Calls for a telephone number that has been changed or discontinued are referred to a special operator whose duty is to supply the appropriate information.

This special operator asks you: "What number are you calling, please?" This may annoy you because you have just given the number you desire and you cannot understand why you are asked to repeat it. But it is necessary in order to advise you of the circumstances.

THE CHANGING OF NUMBERS BETWEEN THE ISSUING OF DIRECTORIES IS ONE OF THE PRINCIPAL REASONS CALLS ARE REFERRED TO A SPECIAL OPERATOR. Numbers must always be changed when subscribers move to another central office area and sometimes when they change their class of service.

When you are advised that a number frequently called has been changed, IT WILL HELP IF YOU WILL MAKE A NOTE OF THIS IN YOUR DIRECTORY.
