YOU can own your own home. It's just a matter of arithmetic. In ten years or so you pay for a home whether or not it's yours.

Say, for instance, that the home pictured here cost $6500. Figure out how much rent you pay and you'll find that it'll amount to the cost of this home in ten or twelve years.

Why, then, continue to fatten the landlord's purse. You owe your family a home—every man does.

Let's talk it over.

BRICE'S MILL

JOSEPH BRICE, Proprietor.

Bake things he likes with FLAVO FLOUR. It's healthful and tissue building. There is more nutrition and a sweeter taste in FLAVO FLOUR. It is made with a new process by the most modern mill in the world. Nature's food values and the delicious flavor of the wheat are not milled out as they are by other methods. FLAVO FLOUR is milled at home from home wheat. It is good. Buy it and patronize Home Industry.

MINUTE TALKS

IN THE INTEREST OF THE BUSINESS MEN'S ASSOCIATION OF CHESTERTOWN

By Wm. R. Moody

During the last two weeks we have published in this column a piece about the drama as a social force, with the idea of reviving interest in pageantry and civic drama in this community .We use the word "reviving" advisedly because there was a time when Chestertown was very much alive not only to the entertaining features of amateur dramatics but to its worth as a civic asset. This interest, in the past few years, seems to have waned and it is to be especially deplored since Chestertown has always been gifted with a wealth of amateur dramatic talent.

No matter how much we may enjoy amateur theatricals given by nearby schools and colleges, there is nothing of the sort that can quite take the place of the drama as used for the especial purpose of community betterment. A play given for some worthy community cause and entered into by the selected dramatic talent of the community and witnessed by the rest of us who are not so gifted, though endowed with certain dramatic appreciation; such a play not only serves the cause of community betterment but keeps alive a general interest in the drama as a social force.

Of course what we might call civic drama or pageantry is something distinct from the ordinary play. We recall a particularly fine pageant given some years ago on the Washington College campus in which a large number of persons, including children, took acting or speaking parts. That was real civic drama. Why can we not revive the old-time civic pride, not only in drama on the boards but in the pageant as well?

The erection of the band stand in the public park is under way. Chestertown has long needed a real band and we sincerely hope the present very creditable aggregation of talent will be so drilled as to present to the people a series of real concerts. Chestertown has a band. What we want now is music of the concert type. We believe Mr. Kelly and his band will give us this to the fullest extent. The Business Men's Association is to be congratulated for having pushed this matter to completion. Everyone, and especially every business man, should contribute to this cause.

And while we have the music, why not develop a little community singing? The present writer was once told by the greatest authority on community singing in America that no matter how off-key a person's voice might be; no matter how discordant the individual note; no matter how lacking in qualities of harmony the voices of many people are—the collective voices of a big crowd of singers "always produce harmony." That is something to think about. There is room in community singing for everybody. And as a community asset, to say nothing of its beneficial effect on the individual, it is invaluable.

The other day we wrote a little piece called, "Main Street." No, we did'nt write the famous book; we only filched its title. But the point is that we urged the regulation of motor traffic at three dangerous points in Chestertown. A short time afterward there occured accidents to pedestrians at two of these three points. We are going to add another to that list of danger spots—where High Street crosses Queen. In the place of traffic cops, someone has suggested the use of upright standards with conventional markings that will leave no excuse for anyone going outside the right of way. This is something else to think about.

GLAD THANKSGIVING DAY

Angelina W. Wray, in "Dumb Animals"

The goldenrod candles are all burned out
By the zigzag fence of gray;
The asters have turned to withered seeds
That the wind will flutter away;
But here's a cheer for the waning year,
And the glad Thanksgiving day!

The thrushes have flown from the tree-tops high,
And the bluebirds could not stay;
And lone and hushed are the empty nests;
But the children smile as they say,
"When frost is chill on the misty hill
Comes the glad Thanksgiving day."

They know that the harvest is garnered in
With its ripe and golden store,
And patient and still the brown earth waits,
For the time of its toil is o'er;
It waits the snow that shall fold it low,
Till it wakes from sleep once more.

The daisies will whiten the fields again
And the robins built, next May;
So gratefully sing, little children, sing,
Till the air with mirth is gay,
A song for the cheer of the happy year
And the glad Thanksgiving day!

SPORTS

WASHINGTON LOSES TO MT. ST. MARY'S IN GRIDIRON BATTLE WHERE PENALTIES ARE THE DECIDING ELEMENT—OTHER SPORTS

Washington College football team lost to Mt. St. Mary's Saturday in a game where officials saw too much, or else saw too little. The score was 14 to 0. A large crowd saw the contest.

The day was a most ideal one for the game. In spite of the fact that the papers of the evening before had predicted cloudy, unsettled weather, Old Sol broke through the dawn amid seas of fog and soon rode clear and clean in a cloudless sky, with just a faint tinge of frost in the air to add zip to the feelings, make the spirits a little brighter and make life, in general, worth living. This perfect fall day drew football fans and belles of the fairer sex from all parts of the Peninsula, as a big football game here usually does. And this liberal sprinkling of fall beauty and feminine splendor were alike impartial to either team, bestowing each with the hallow of their charms, through the medium of trumpets and the like, as they saw fit. And this encouragement was not without its effect, as was evidenced when dashing Bobby Cavanaugh, finding a rent in the stubborn Mt. St. Mary's line, tore through the whole team and planted the ball behind the visitor's goal posts, only, however, to be recalled again.

Washington lost the game, not because Mt. St. Mary's played any better football, but because of technicalities, seen by over-zealous officials, who had the faculty of seeing the faults of the Washington team without, at the same time, seeing the faults of the visitors, which were seen plainly from the side lines. This cost Washington the game without a doubt. They were penalized about 150 yards during the game, the visitors getting but one five-yard penalty.

Washington took the offensive from the start of the game and soon had the ball well in Mt. St. Mary's territory. They seemed about to drive a powerful wedge into Mt.St. Mary's line when they lost fifteen yards in three successive penalties, which compelled them to punt. Mt. St. Mary's could do nothing with Washington's line and punted to Armstrong on about the 40-yard line. Armstrong fumbled the ball, Mt. St. Mary's recovering the same. Mt. St. Mary's began to hammer the Washington line for gains, but the end of the half found the two teams battling savagely on Washington's forty-yard line, with practically no immediate chance of either gaining an advantage. It looked to the write like the two teams were so evenly matched that neither would be able to score unless a fluke occurred.

But in the second half, after Washington had punted to Mt. St. Mary's, and had, in turn, received the ball, Washington had its best chance for a victory. Washington was in posession of the ball on Mt. St. Mary's 45-yard line. A bad pass went over the heads of the backs. Carrington raced for the ball, and facing a 20-yard loss, heaved a beautiful forward pass to Reiger, who caught it in fine style and made a dash for Mt. St. Mary's goal line. He was downed in short order, but had made up the loss and, at the same time, made a first down for his team. The two teams lined up on Mt. St. Mary's 30-yard line. In the first scrimmage Cavanaugh went through practically the whole visiting team and planted the ball behind their goal line. This would have given Washington a decided advantage, and probably the victory, but the head linesman had seen Crowe hit one of the opposing team. As a result, the ball was taken to the place where the play started, Washington penalized about 40 yards, Crowe taken out of the game and Mt. St. Mary's placed in a position from which they soon scored a touchdown. This unfortunate play, which was simply a retaliation on the part of Crowe for several blows by his opponent, broke the spirit of the Washington team, which offered little resistance to the rushes of the visitors.

Mt. St. Mary's kicked to Washington and they made valiant efforts to pierce Mt. St. Mary's stiffening line with little success. And at this time came the third play which was instrumental in Washington's defeat. Mt. St. Mary's threw a long pass to one of their men on Washington's ten yard line. The ball grounded about a foot in front of the recipient of the same, who made a very neat pick-up of it, as aws seen by hundreds of people, especially by those close to the goal where the same as made. This incomplete pass was allowed by the officiaals and it spelled defeat in letters big and plain for the home team, for Mt. St. Mary's soon put the ball over, although Washington offered the most decided resistance.

Taken as a whole, the two teams were evenly matched, but the heavy penalties inflicted on Washington, at times when they were most costly, cost them the game. Had Washington not been inflicted with the penalty which cost them their touchdown, Washington would probably have won the game, because with a seven point lead, and the game over three-fourths over, followers of football here believe that Mt. St. Mary's would not have been able to score.

Many of Washington's players were injured during the contest. Chief among these was Jack Carroll, left end, who has a badly swollen mouth, and who left game soon after it began. Negri also retired from the game in the second quarter with a badly cut nose. Many others received cuts and bruises from flying fists and unbridled feet. It was not infrequent for spectators to see blood flowing from the wounds of Washington men in profusion and the game will go down in the annals of Washington football almost as a revival of the "Bloody Angle" game between Harvard and Princeton in 1887, which was one of the most notorious exhibitions of football as it was then played and resulted in the injury of a majority of those participaing.

Keenan, Cavanaugh and Reiger did well for Washington, while Ruiz, quarterback, starred for Mt. St. Marya's.

Princton and Harvard will clash today at the former's stadium. We pick Princeton to win. Both teams are far from championship aggregations, but Princeton seems to be rounding into better form as the time for the big tests come. It will be the 27th game played between these two teams since the beginning of their football relations 46 years ago. In the record of these contests Princeton has won 15 games, lost eight and tied three. Kent always sends a contingent of rooters to the Princeton games.

Hopkins won from Western Maryland Saturday; St. John's lost to the State eleven; Yale won from Army; Syracuse from Penn State; Penn from Pitt; Cornell from Dartmouth. Notre Dame looks to be the best team in the country; in the East Cornell, Yale and Syracuse have the edge in the order named.

The season for killing rabbits, quail, etc., begins in Kent and Queen Annes today, Saturday, and lasts until January 1. Gunners, be careful with your firearms, regarding both yourselves and the public in general.

Washington College football team and Catholic University will meet today in Washington. This is always a good, clean contest, and is looked forward to eagerly by the players. The Catholic University team defeated the Mt. St. Mary's team recently 6-0.

A national game preserve will probably be made in the marsh lands of the Upper Mississippi river which will be the largest in the United States.

The unexpected balance of the State Game Department of Maryland, together with the additional revenues from the extra one cent added to the oyster tax, puts the State Conservation Department as a whole on a sel-supporting basis. The Game Department shows a balance at the end of the 1923 fiscal year of $46,800, of which $14,300 were realized out of the 1923 period, and the rest of the accrued belances since 1919.

Bumper Crops In Maryland

Results of this year's farming in Maryland are far enough advanced to justify the estimates that 1923 will be one of the great years in the farming industry of Maryland. There is scarcely a crop that has not made better returns than the average for the five years, 1917-21, and, generally, both crops and prices are better than 1922.

Wheat averaged 19.5 bushels per acre this year.

Corn brought a good crop, the yield being about 23,800,000 bushels.

Oats show a larger yield than in 1922.

Barley, rye and buckwheat all show a better yield by acreage and better price.

Hay will bring the farmer $12.40 a ton instead of $10.78, last year's price.

The yield of apples is becoming greater.

About 2,000,000 more pounds of tobacco were raised this year than last.
