Maple Avenue Now Opened To Public

The Maple Avenue concrete road, which connects Chester Bridge with Washington avenue, was opened up to travel Thursday. It is understood that Water street, on each side of Maple avenue, will be filled in with oyster shells for the time, while Maple avenue will be continued from the hill to the bridge with macadam. For the past three weeks travel has been compelled to detour up Water street, which has been quite rough. During the past week, at the point where the hill was being removed, rain turned it into one of the worst mud holes seen around Chestertown for some years, causing travel at this point to be handicapped considerably. So many cars were stuck in the bog that Roads Engineer Shure stationed a big state truck at this point which pulled many cars to harder roads. Realizing the gravity of the situation, Roads Engineer Shure put almost the full force of the state roads system under him into action on Wednesday evening, digging out the mud and putting a firmer bedding of sand and stone in its place. At the same time Officer Cooper had a force of men dumping shells on each side of Water street and laying the mains which had been damaged. The result has been most satisfactory. As we went to press, Engineer Shure had practically filled in the hole, had swung into action his big roller and would, it appeared to us, have the road in good shape in short order. With the hill almost eliminated, and Maple avenue now a hard road to Washington avenue, the improvement, generally speaking, is one of the biggest made since High street was transformed from one of the deepest bogs on the Peninsula to the finest street of any town on the Shore.
