second string players into their places. The play that the local gridders saw fit to oppose the decision of the referee came when Chapman punted over the head of the Swarthmore safty man. The ball rolled on toward the goal line when Burk, Washington end, made an attempt to down it before it crossed the goal line. He did not hinder its passage across the line into the end zone. The referee ruled the ball a touchback and the Washington players began their squawk. It was then that Coach over P. M. C. Brown did the Thurston act and with a wave of his arm changed the varthe second string into a varsity. Only a few of the original players were returned to the game by the Washington mentor.
