day of the trip, but not sufficiently warm to cause some of the crowd from going to church. Uncle Jim said he was going to the church in Hampton with the steeple on it. He did not know what sort of a church it was but there he was going. He returned fully repaid for his visit, for he said he heard a good old Methodist sermon, shook hands with the preacher, and was introduced to a number of pretty girls. Sunday evening we attended a sacred concert at the Hygeia Hotel, by the Fortress Monroe Band. Words cannot describe the grand music. As the Doctor remarked it bore us away to the clouds, and when its sweet, transporting strains died away in the distance, it hurled us again to the scenes of earth with a dull thud. We were loathe to leave such a scene as this, but remembering that this was the Sabbath day, we repaired early to our cots and made ready to visit Norfolk on the morrow. Here we found the same scenes that are presented in any city of the South. There is a hospitality about the southern people that does not exist in the North, and a degree of love and self-indulgence which is peculiarly absent here. But we do not see the thrift and push in the South that is characteristic of the people of the North. This is particularly noticeable in Norfolk. The suburbs of the town are as dilapidated as any old out of the way town; its streets are narrow and dirty, and nothing save the houses and hum of business would cause us to feel that we were in a city. We had decided to visit Virginia Beach in the afternoon and wended our way to the depot, but were told that the next train left at 5.20, and thinking this too long to wait determined to take in Ocean View, which we did and Oh! how sorry we were that we did not wait for the Virginia Beach train after we arrived at Ocean View. This place is nothing more than a beer garden, and frequented by the commonest class of people that Norfolk can afford. We were sorry we were so completely sold, but we made short work of it and soon left for Norfolk. It was on this trip however that we were enabled to get a glimpse of Virginia's agricultural facilities, and if the whole State of Va. is similar in quality to the land we viewed along the way, we cannot see how it is possible for a farmer in that section to make both sides of his account balance at the end of the year. I don't think we saw a shock of wheat the whole time we were in Virginia, nothing in the world but sweet potatoes, mosquitos and grasshoppers; and if our Virginia brethren in those parts at least will stop over into Kent for a season, he will think that he has journeyed from a land of famine to the garden of Eden. An old gentleman tried to induce Arthur to buy a nice tract of land down there for himself and future wife; but Arthur told him very politely that he had no wife, and did not expect to have any yet awhile, and if he did, he would surely seek another clime than the land about Ocean View. We left Norfolk where by the way the boys attended another concert, on Tuesday morning, and in the evening after a most delightful sail, we anchored—where—in Old Point harbor. We decided that we would leave for home the following day Wednesday. Uncle Jim grew anxious about his little grandson, and thought that he would take the boat for home, as we did not expect to arrive home before the first of the following week. So after dinner he bade us all farewell, taking with him our very best love, etc. to the girl we had left behind, and shortly after that we were sailing our homeward bound voyage. The cry now was "On to Yorktown," and Wednesday night we anchored for the night at the mouth of that historic river close to the spot where the fleet of De Rochambeau and Count De Grasse of Revolutionary fame were anchored on the memorable 19th October 1781. We visited Yorktown on the following day. Thinking that it was a town of some size and importance, it proved however, to be the only a village of 250 inhabitants of which 200 are negroes. But we knew that we were standing upon the same soil whereon the Father of our beloved Country won our independence, and within very sight of th[...] [...] most exact carving and most significant manner, are depicted in tablets of living stone the relations of France and America in this great battle, the combination seal of France and America, the inscription of XVI, of France and the United States, the coat of arms of France the date of Resolution of Congress appropriating money for its erection, Emblem of Prosperity Provisional articles of Peace concluded Nov. 30th, 1782, and permanent conclusion of Peace Sept. 3d, 1783 between Great Britain and United States. Above all this there is that grand motto—one country, one constitution, one destiny. Above this there are 13 female figures with locked arms representing the 13 original colonies. Farther up there is the word "Yorktown" inscribed in large characters through which there passes the Olive branch. Then there comes the American Eagle, upon whose outstretched wings stands the statue of the Goddess of Liberty, and as one stands and gazes upon that significant shaft, and takes in the meaning that it conveys, we can not help but exclaim—"God bless Washington and our native land." We also visited the cave where, it is said, Lord Cornwallis hid himself when he was pursued by Washington's forces; we found this cave to be a two chambered vault, one chamber of which was just large enough to contain a man, but whether or not this is the exact spot of his concealment we are not prepared to say. We left Yorktown in the afternoon with the intention of visiting the home of Col. Rawleigh and having another dance in our honor, but the elements foiled our intentions, and we were compelled to proceed on our homeward course; we got as far as the Patuxent river on Friday evening, and it looked so much like we were going to have a "flurry" that the Captain thought we had better anchor for the night in the mouth of that river. We did so, and paid our "respects" to Solomon's Island that night, we endulged in a Dutch treat to ice-cream and lemonade; took in the sight of the island which we found to be a pleasant place indeed, and came near disgracing ourselves at seeing the dogs chase Bordley, the steward, as he went up the hill to fetch a pail of water. Dr. Dodd depicted the scene on a shell that he picked up on the shores of the York river and Bordley says he is going to place it on his mantle as a memento of the occasion. We left shore at eleven o'clock to spend a quiet night of rest. But just as we got aboard ship, we saw one of the most awe-inspiring sights of the trip. There were quite a number of vessels in the harbor for safety from the approaching storm, and while we were sitting on deck the writer noticed a peculiar light some distance out in the Bay. We looked and saw the firing of sky rockets and Roman candles of green and red, and were sure that this meant distress, and instantly the words of that grand old hymn came to my mind, "Throw out the life-line, someone is sinking to night." Just at that moment one of the vessels displayed a green light which illuminated the whole harbor, and the vessel in the bay answered the signal with another display of green and red lights. The light in the harbor burned for fully five minutes, and through the darkness we could see that the vessel in the bay had changed her course, until finally she came joyously in to harbor, and the captain dropped anchor in the haven of rest. This was the first instance we had had of the use of ocean signals of distress, and it was surely a sight that we shall not soon forget. On Saturday morning at half past four we weighed anchor for home, and with a strong southwest breeze, and one of the most delightful sails we have ever had, we cast anchor for the last time in Chestertown harbor at half past four in the afternoon, all well and delighted with our trip upon the water of the ever beautiful Chesapeake Bay.
