From Mike To Ike With Regards

Dear Ike:

I saw you at the fights the other night but didn't get to talk to you. What did you think of the card? If you were asking me, which you aren't, I'd say everything was swell but the rassing. And that, well—phooey! If the promoters were wise they'd put another fight on the card and let the rasslers sit ringside where they belong. Or is ringside to high class for them? These exhibitions are bad enough when they are good but when they are bad they smell. And the Austin-Brockman affair was worse than Hubbard's Fertilizer plant when a fresh load of rotten fish arrives.

The high spot of the evening, of course, was the first round of the Gonzalez-Cosden affair. Boy, did leather fly. For action it was better than a double feature program starring Tom Mix and Buck Jones.

We were all sorry to see Henry lose but he should have learned a lot from the fight. For instance he should have learned that he can't outfight Cosden at close range. Bob came through on his greater experience and that includes a first class knowledge of the unrefined methods of ring warfare. Cosden wasn't breaking clean and punched the Betterton boy foul a couple of times. But that's no excuse. Everybody in the house knew that in the first round and if Gonzalez didn't find it out until the fifth he didn't deserve to win.

Henry claims his leg muscles refused to act in that fatal fifth—that's why he didn't come out of the corner and stood rooted in one spot until Cosden sent him down. He claims further that he wasn't out but just couldn't make his legs get him up. Well that may not be out in Henry's language but in mine it's capital O, capital U, capital T.

And speaking of out, as we were, Ben Parson's manager claims Ben wasn't out after taking that sucker punch on the jaw from Kid Cosden. Maybe he wasn't. Maybe he was like the late Harry Gardner, colored, who went in the ring one time during a stay at the Maryland Penitentiary. Harry's opponent was too big and too strong. Harry went down several times before he decided to stay down. The referee counted the required ten and then to make sure said to Harry: "Boy, are you out?" Harry's reply might well apply to Parson's. It was: "Boss, I ain't in."

The second protege of Red Smith, the Betterton manager, on the card, one Kid Seala, had a bad case of buck fever. He let Dud Bedford hit him with everything but the waterbucket and finally quit while on his stool in the corner. Red believes the boy still has some stuff in him so maybe they'll trot him out again some evening.

The bout between Imbrigoglio and Barrett, as you remember, was the only one to go the limit. It was good in spots and bad in others. But it was the cleanest bout I've ever seen. Both boys broke clean and finished the fight in good humor.

That brings us to the rassing. Well, the less said about that the better. Brockman ought to leave that youngster of his home and as for Rusty Austin—he of the Hindu bow—he should go back to that part of Baltimore they call Texas and hide.

I suppose I'll be seeing you at the Chestertown Bowling Alleys Friday evening when Ralph Greenleaf puts in his appearance. "Pots" Barnett, the proprietor, is priming Ray "Josh" Meekins—"Meefookey" to some of the boys—to cross cues with the former champ. Not that I don't respect Josh's prowess on the green cloth but I think the management missed a natural by not securing "Doctor Bliff" Blackway as Greenleaf's opponent.

It won't be long now before the basketball season is resumed. Tom Kibler will start drilling his boys tomorrow for the opening of the Maryland Collegiate Basketball Association race. The Shoremen should go pretty well in the loop this season. They can't do any worse than they did last year and the team is certainly stronger where most of the other teams in the league are weaker.

The Shoremen open on January 11 with Hopkins. They did last year and that was the only game they won in the league all season. They jump back to Chestertown on Saturday night to meet the defending champions, Western Maryland, the team everybody expects to finish in the cellar this year. Well we'll see and in the meantime I hope I'll be seeing you.

With regards,
Mike.
