When you invest in a Player-Piano, look carefully to the tone quality, expression and durability, for you must live with it a lifetime.

Be sure it will give you lasting pleasure and satisfaction all through the years. You will run no risk of a future regret if you get a

LESTER PLAYER-PIANO

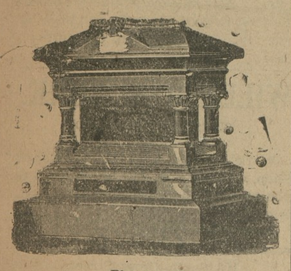

Back of its reliability is the splendid reputation of a third of a century. And yet, with all its admitted superiority of tone and action and finish, it is as easy to own as one of the inferior kinds. We will gladly show you how.

How much does it cost you to keep $500 team and a $100 wagon standing fifteen minutes?

It takes time to pump and carry water for the horses and the live stock. All the while you are doing that, the team and wagon are earning nothing for you. If you had it would supply fresh, clean, running water anywhere you want it. Then you could turn the faucet, water the horses in a jiffy and get on your job a whole lot sooner.

Western Electric Power & Light

It doesn't cost much to install an outfit like this and it soon saves enough time to pay for itself.

Aside from the pumping, it does the milking, the separating, the churning, the grinding and other barn chores, besides doing housework such as washing, ironing, sweeping, dishwashing, and sewing.

And first and last of all it furnishes electric light everywhere. The brightest, cleanest, safest light in all the world.

Let us tell you more about the outfit and the things it does! There's no obligation!

THE GREATER PEACE
By Edgar A. Guest

I have lived long enough to learn
The things which are of great concern
And I would write them down today
For him who follows in my way;
I would impress upon his mind
The peace that comes of being kind
And I would teach him there's no fame
That can excel an honored name.
Unto the eyes of youth it seems
That most important are its dreams,
Yet high-flown dreams come tumbling down
And few attain the world's renown
And even those who rise to power
Must live through many a troubled hour;
The thing that counts through peace and strife
Is, above all, a well-lived life.

Better by far than glory famed,
Is to meet all men unashamed;
Greater than fortune's glittering gold
Is love of friends when man is old;
Who earns his neighbor's high esteem
Need never mourn some broken dream
Who knows true friends are standing by
Has peace which wealth cannot supply.

As Time, the great teacher of us all,
Shows us her glories, large and small
Much that we once thought splendid, pales
And the great joy of conquest fails;
Richer than days victorious glow
The kindlier days of long ago,
He knows true glory at the end
Who's played the man and played the friend.

POULTRY

ITEME THAT WILL INTEREST OUR KENT COUNTY POULTRY RAISERS

It is surprising how many people are interested in poultry. Not long ago a Baltimore attorney of prominence told us that he always read our poultry column with great interest; in fact, he sort of awaited its coming to his home. Only this week a Philadelphia lady told us, indirectly, that the poultry items were the first news she read every week from Kent county. This lady has always resided in the city, but she, too, takes great interest in poultry. One day this week a Kent county lady told us that she had read our items with considerable profit and interest and that she got much that was of real worth to be in the business. And thus you can see how people, in widely different spheres of life, are interested in poultry, showing that our paper is a real benefit and pleasure to people in many walks of life.

There is considerable opposition to the Leghorn as a farm bird by middle men and others. There is no question about it, the Leghorn is a highly specialized breed whose strong point is the production of eggs. Just what is the matter with the Leghorn as a table fowl does not seem to be well established. In Indiana, for instance, poultry buyers pay about 4 cents a pound less for Leghorn hens than for hens of the dual-purpose breeds that weigh 4 pounds or over. That seems to be logical, for it is pretty generally understood that 100 pounds of small hens will produce less meat and more bone and offal than 100 pounds of big hens. In Missouri, on the other hand, commission houses pay as much for Leghorn cocks and hens as for other old fowl, but pay 12 cents a pound less for Leghorn springers than for 2-pound birds of the dual-purpose breeds. Poultrymen realize that the Leghorn cocks and hens are deficient in size and other ways and it is largely for this reason that dual-purpose animals are most popular on mid-western farms, whereas highly specialized and egg types in animals are most popular on the eastern and western coasts which are removed from where the feed is grown, or on highly specialized dairy or eggs farms wherever located.

This warfare of the breeds will go on indefinitely. The breeds are all in competition with one another. The best breed for each condition will not be determined by propaganda but by the fitness of that breed to meet the particular economic condition under which it is handled.

There are altogether more than a hundred distinct breeds and varieties of domestic poultry. Frequently these different kinds are divided into groups according to their geographic origin. The Leghorns and Minorcas are thus classed as Mediterranean breeds, the Dorkings as English and the Plymouth Rocks as American. Sometimes they are classified according to their utility qualifications. In this classification Leghorns are called an egg breed, Brahamas a meat breed and Wyandottes a dual purpose breed. Neither of these classifications is entirely correct and they should be superseded by a truly scientific grouping. The Single Comb White Leghorn is an American product; the Light and Dark Brahamas were developed by American breeders and hardly any of this modern characteristics would be recognized in the old original importations of Brahma Pootras from China just prior to the Civil War. Our poultry breeds are all rather new and respond rapidly to systematic selective matings. Expert feeders find that all breeds respond in some manner to special feeding methods, and feed plays a part in their progress.

Some people have trouble with partly grown chickens. The trouble is often due to tight coops. Lack of ventilation, with accumulated droppings, giving off odors, ruin many broods of chicks. The little fellows need outdoor air, and need more and more of it as the weather gets hotter and their bodies grow larger. Plenty of feed, plenty of air and plenty of room are about as important as anything we know for growing stock and old birds also.

The real poultry lover never grows tired of watching the youngsters change from one coat of feathers to the next. First we have the little downy chick which quickly sprouts wing feathers, followed by back and breast feathers. Hardly has this set of feathers grown out when another molt takes place, the pointed wing feathers drop out and the rounded wing feathers of the adult bird take their place.

We have frequently been asked, what is the difference between an egg farm and a breeding establishment? One is a White Leghorn egg farm for the production of commercial eggs for the market. The other is a breeding establishment that supplies eggs for hatching, baby chicks and stock birds.

The hot weather is mighty hard on growing stock that has no shade, and there are a great many establishments in this predicament in this section of the country. In this event you must make your houses in such a manner that they will be a safe retreat from the heat of summer months or they will surely go back.

—Unveiling of a monument to a hog, at Blue Ball, O., was attended by hundreds of stock-breeders from all over the country. The monument was to a hog owned by the late W. C. Hankinson, who wrote the first pedigree and established the Poland China strain.
