Cuton Monuments and Tombs

LOOKING FORWARD

By Edgar A. Guest

When the blue gets back in the skies once more
And the vines grow green 'round the kitchen door,
When the roses bud and the robins come
I stretch myself and I say: "Ho-hum! I ought to work but I guest I wont,
Though some want riches today, I don't;
This looks to me like the sort of day
That was made to idle and dream away."

When the sun is high and the air just right,
With the trees all blossomy, pink and white,
And the grass as soft as a feather bed,
With the white clouds drifting overhead,
I stretch and yawn like a school boy then,
And turn away from the walks of men,
And tell myself in a shame-faced way
"I'm going to play hookey from work today."

'Here is a morning too rare to miss,
And what is gold to a day like this,
And what is fame to the things I see
Through the lattice work of a fine old tree?
There is work to do, but the work can wait,
There are goals to reach, there are foes to hate,
There are hurtful things which the smart may say,
But nothing like that shall spoil today.

"Today I'll turn from the noisy town
And just put all my burdens down,
I'll quit the world and its common sense,
And the things men think are of consequence,
To chum with the birds and the friendly trees,
And try to fathom their mysteries;
For here is a day which looks to be
The kind I can fritter away on me."

POULTRY

ITEMS OF INTEREST THAT WILL INTEREST OUR RAISERS OF CHICKENS

According to the Department of Agriculture, more eggs have been laid this year than ever before, the total running up to something like 22,000,000,000 eggs, an increase of 10 per cent since the armistice. The experts have also found that the per capita consumption of eggs in the United States is one-half an egg a day.

Now that fall is coming on and with it the high-price part of the year in egg production, it may be well to bear what follows in mind. A most important factor in winter egg production is to get pullets thoroughly fat before inducing them to lay. A pullet that begins laying before she has stored up a large reserve of fat can not withstand the long strain of laying like one that has a larger supply of stored-up energy. In order to insure the pullets going into the winter laying season with liberal amounts of fat stored up to protect them against the cold and furnish the energy needed for egg making, particular attention ought to be paid during the fall months to the amount of grain in the ration. A practice now being followed by many successful poultrymen is to begin reducing the proportion of mash and increasing the amount of grain in the ration about the time the pullets' combs begin to redden. Instead of forcing the pullets into premature production by feeding excessive quantities of mash, it is now considered better practice to begin limiting the mash before the pullets are quite ready to lay and, through the use of larger proportions of grain to get the birds thoroughly fat. The pullet that lays before she has reached proper size will lay an egg that is so small as to have but little market value, and keen students of the subject prefer to hold back early fall production by feeding a ration which will insure fat rather than stimulate egg production until the pullets have reached nearly full body development.

Hens require a liberal amount of corn when in the molt. When a hen molts she is invariably in thin flesh and before she can lay prolifically her reserve supply of energy must be built up through fat just the same as with pullets. Molting hens need protein in the ration to insure the growth of feathers, so the meat scrap should not be eliminated from the mash but as with pullets the amount of mash consumed during the molting time may be somewhat reduced by feeding more liberally of corn and other fattening grain.

—The Standard Oil Company's tank steamer visited this section last week and left a large quantity of oil, etc., at their local distributing station near Massey & Kilbourne's fertilizer plant on Chester river. This new plant of this company will be used as a central supply station for this section. It is reported that the Massey & Kilbourne Company and the Standard Oil Co. will make considerable improvements to the Quaker Neck road in that section in the near future.

SPORTS

THE REALM OF SPORT VIEWED FROM MANY ANGLES

Predictions are many and varied regarding the coming football season at Washington College. There is a rumor to the effect that Washington College will have a line that wil average well on toward 180, with a pair of ends that will be able to hold down the combination that are usually hurled against this quarter. Crowe will probably return; also Eddie Keenan and Jack Carroll, accompanied by another athlete from Waterbury of recognized ability. With a heavy line and keen, shifty ends, Washington's back field will be able to give a good account of itself. Crowe is one of the speediest halfbacks who has worn a football suit at Washington College for many years and with a line able to hold back the other team, will show a class that will astonish many of our local fans. Comparatively few have begun to think about football in Kent county yet, but the cool mornings an dnights that will come as September hastens toward brown October will bring recollections of the past that will stimulate an interest and raise anew the eternal question, "What kind of a football team will Washington College have this year?"

The championship games between the winner of the championship in the Eastern Shore League, Parksley and the winner of the Blue Ridge League. These games are promoted by the Baltimore Sun and will be well worth following.

Frank Lundin, of New Londan, Iowa, took the highest honors in the horseshoe championship match at Des Moines, Iowa, recently. He won 14 out of 15 games played and scored 424 ringers and 118 double ringers, receiving a diamond-set medal and $250. Last year's champion, Frank Jackson, of Kellerton, Iowa, known as the "grand old man" among Hawkeye horseshoe players, won second prize by winning 13 of 15 games played and scored 389 ringers and 80 double ringers. Seventeen-year-old Lyle Brown, of Des Moines, the only player who defeated the new champion, took third prize by winning 11 games. He scored 441 ringers and 109 double ringers. Next year's tournament and convention of the National Horseshoe Pitchers' Association will be held in Cleveland.

The fight for the championship in the two big leagues is interesting this year again. Both New York teams are leading, with the Giants having a fairly safe margin, the Yanks, however, barely holding on to the lead, with St Louis, in both leagues, clamoring for the top honors. Since New York made its famous trade with Boston, the Yankees have been playing more like real champions.
