SAVE GIRL BY HEROIC WORK

Sixteen-year-old Isabel Harman Became Ill in Water at Tolchester—Was Under Water for Some Time When Dragged Out by a 13-year-old Washington Boy—Dr. H. L. Sinskey Refused to Despair When All Thought the Girl Dead.

Four hours of heroic work on the part of a physician, which resulted in the resuscitation of a young woman after she had been taken from the water and pronounced dead by her friends, prevented a tragic ending to an outing party to Tolchester Beach Sunday afternoon. The young woman who had such a miraculous escape from death is Miss Isabel Harman, the pretty 16-year-old daughter of Mrs. Rosa Harman, who resides at 845 South Paca street, and the physician to whom she owes her life is Dr. H. L. Sinskey, of 115 North Mount street.

Dr. Sinskey was the man of the hour. After the apparently lifeless body of Miss Harman had been rescued from the chilly water of Chesapeake Bay by Joseph Schwartz, a Washington youth, 13 years of age, and taken to the shore by willing hands, the young Baltimore physician began his great battle with what looked like certain death.

Went With Friend
The young girl went down the Bay to Tolchester with a friend, Mrs. Rosa Wilson, who resides on South Fremont avenue.

About 2 o'clock, not only the house at which bathing suits are procured was thronged with prospective bathers, but hundreds lined the beach ready to take a plunge. Mrs. Wilson, it is said, could not withstand the temptation of taking a "swim," as she termed it, but hesitated about going without her companion; Miss Harman had been to Tolchester before, but she had never ventured into the water. Still, it did not take much persuasion to cause her to decide, and 15 minutes later the two members of the little party were noticed a short distance from the shore.

Being her first experience, the young girl was timid, and told the older woman that she preferred to hug the shore, as she might be so unfortunate as to get in deep water. She had plenty of company. Near her at least 50 men and women were dancing playfully in the water, but apparently unmindful of her. During the period of merriment, it is said, the two companions drifted apart, and Miss Harman was left standing alone in about four feet of water, which came just a little above her waist.

After remaining by herself for a few minutes, it is stated, that the girl, not being accustomed to the chilliness of the bay water, grew sick, which was followed by a fainting spell, and the next thing those nearby knew the young woman had disappeared under the water. It happened about the time that Mrs. Wilson turned around seeking her girl companion, but missed her. Then she gave the alarm, and immediately a half dozen men were diving in different directions making frantic efforts to rescue the missing girl.

The Body Recovered.

As luck would have it, Joseph Schwartz, of Washington, who went to Tolchester with the Excelsior Athletic Club, of Baltimore Sunday, witnessed the disappearance of Miss Harman, and swam hastily to the spot where he saw her go down. Dive succeeded dive, and finally the youth, with still plenty of strength left, disappeared from view for the fifth time, and when he came to the surface he was clinging to the form of the girl.

Getting the apparently lifeless woman ashore was only a matter of a few minutes, and then there was a wild rush for a physician, but before the willing messengers got very far Dr. Sinskey, who himself was numbered among the bathers, was attracted by the crowd which had congregated on the pier, and fearing that an accident had befallen some swimmer he swam to shore immediately. Then making his way through the congested mass of humanity the young physician asked that the anxious persons give him plenty of room, and after they obeyed he started in upon his work.

One glance at the blue and swollen features of the girl almost convinced the physician that she was beyond human aid, yet somewhat clinging to the idea that there might be at least one chance in a hundred of resuscitating the unfortunate woman, he entered upon his task with a determined will. He first noticed to see if there was any breathing at all but the answer was no visible sign of respiration. All had stopped and there was not the smallest portion of the girl's face that hadn't turned the color of indigo. From the nostrils, too, water ran freely, and as the anxious physician squeezed the abdomen he could hear the water and sand rattling.

Dr. Sinskey then sighed and looked sadly at Mrs. Wilson and her little child as they stood by him, crying as though their hearts would break.

"Don't Give Up Hope."
"Don't give up hope yet, Mrs. Wilson," said the physician to her. "We have not given the girl up and everything will be done to save her."

Everything was done. Removing the limp form of the girl further up on the boardwalk, where the curious could not gather in such large numbers, the physician, after asking to be given plenty of room, began his heroic work.

Again Dr. Sinskey looked for some sign of respiration, but again it looked as though all had stopped. Taking the girl's hands in his own, the physician started moving them slowly, increasing his actions as the moments flew quickly by, and with this method he caught hold of various parts of the woman's body, all the time keeping her in action.

This treatment was continued for an hour, and Dr. Sinskey then administered two strong hypodermics and followed this closely up with the rubbing and working motion again. The physician never tired. From 3 o'clock until 6 o'clock—the time for the departure of the Susquehanna for Baltimore—he labored unceasingly and prepared to continue. Getting permission of the officers of the steamer to bring the girl to Baltimore, Miss Harman was quickly carried aboard and the work of resuscitation continued.

After the steamer had gotten under a full head of steam Dr. Sinskey pulled out his watch and found that it was 6.30 o'clock, and that three hours and a half had been spent in a frantic endeavor to save the young woman's life, but that at that time there was not the slightest sign of returning life. Still, the physician did not despair. He worked all the harder, and declared to all on board that if the girl's life could be saved he would do it.

A Sign of Life.
Artificial respiration was again used, with still greater force, and this was quickly followed by another hypodermic, which was even stronger than the first. This of course, was accompanied by working the limbs of the body backward and forward. There was not a minute's cessation, and it was this heroic work which saved the day.

Again Dr. Sinskey pulled his watch and found that it was 6.45 o'clock, and no sooner had he put his timepiece back in his pocket, when the body moved of its own volition. Next came a twitching of the lips, and what should then greet the eyes of the expectant physician but a heaving of the woman's breast. There was then a shout which went up from Dr. Sinskey, which was caught up by the hundreds of spectators who stood breathlessly about, and cries of "She is saved!" echoed and re-echoed from the stern of the boat to the bow.

Encouraged by these visible signs of returning life Dr. Sinskey renewed his efforts with all the more vigor, and the Susquehanna had not traveled one mile further before the girl was breathing freely. With this breathing came color to the face, and as the physician bent over the body awaiting further developments the girl surprised him by opening her eyes. Another shout rent the air, and both men and women showered Dr. Sinskey with congratulations, but he asked them to keep quiet, as the condition of the girl required it.

Then the cheering ceased and the crowd did nothing but look at the young woman who was battling heroically for life in silence. She rallied splendidly, and by the time the steamer docked at Light street she was able to converse with her rescuer.

"It was a remarkable case," said Dr. Sinskey, "I thought the girl was certainly dead, and I am glad that I had a part in saving her life. There was enough sand and water in her lungs to kill six women."

Dr. Sinskey recently graduated at the University of Maryland.

DEER KILLS BULLDOG.

Pittsburg, June 20.—Hundreds of visitors in Riverside Park yesterday afternoon were treated to the novel sight of a fight to death between a deer and a bulldog. The deer won handsily, killing his antagonist without receiving more than a few wounds himself.

The bulldog was a prizefighter, weighing 40 pounds, and was taken into the park by his owner, Mrs. Walter Dunk, of Perryville avenue. She had the animal on a chain, but when he spied the buck he upset Mrs. Dunk, pulling the chain from her hand and the fight was on.

The bulldog missed landing on the first run and this was fatal, as the buck met the second rush with a vicious kick, which sent the dog flying. Several times the dog came, only to be downed by the feet of the buck, who finally jumped into the air, coming down with four hoofs on the prostrate dog again and again until life was extinct.

Mrs. Dunk injured herself badly trying to rip a pail, from a fence to beat the buck. The dog was valued at $500.

This State Leads.—Last year Maryland canned more than two-fifths of all the tomatoes put up in the United States. The total pack of the country amounted to 12,920,000 cases of two dozen cans per case. Of that amount Maryland alone packed 5,294,253 cases. By far the greater part of the tomatoes canned in Maryland are put up in Baltimore. The output of the country canneries is large but it does not compare with that of the city's packing houses. In the production of canned tomatoes Baltimore leads all other cities in the country.
