HE SAW THE ELEPHANT.

Possessed of a burning desire to "see the elephant" as it is found in Wilmington, and with fourteen dollars in currency, a young man of Warwick, Md., blew into town Saturday evening and announced his intentions.

Of course there was no trouble in finding a willing guide, and one long the festive Warwick was costily ensconced in a place where liquid refreshments were to be had. In this place was a girl, whose smiling offer of refreshment in the shape of a bottle of cold beer was accepted by the Marylander. Strangely enough it was not long after he had purchased and consumed part of this cooling drink that he became drowsy and requested an opportunity to take a little nap.

The desired accommodation was given him, and at an early hour in the morning he was rudely awakened by the possessor of a gruff voice and powerful physique, who unceremoniously hustled him out into the unfeeling world. After getting outside the house, the Marylander claims that a search of his "jeans" disclosed the painful fact that all his riches had taken unto themselves wings. He told his troubles to a friend, who gave him assistance for the time being, and this morning he will probably apply to the police for a warrant for the one he suspects of having made away with the coin. As evidence, the Warwickier will go to the police station armed with the unlucky bottle of beer, or what is left of it, in order that a charge of selling liquor without a license may be added to that of theft.—Sunday Star.
