Isn't It Awful?

You surely know by this time that a cream separator may even double your dairy profits, and make the work easier, too. Then why not have one?

Just take one good look at these pictures—and then a good look at your wife. The upper picture shows the simple bowl of the Dairy Tubular Separator—washed clean in one to three minutes. The other picture shows the actual insides of one of the many styles of complicated bowls used in all other separators. Which are you going to ask your wife to wash? We'll be pleased to take a Tubular apart for you. Bring your wife to see it.

Natalie of the Neighborhood House.

By CECIL ALLEN

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

Neighborhood House was Natalie's charity by inheritance. Her mother had founded it and had met the deficiencies in its exchequer from time to time. Natalie was not sentimental, but her mother's pathetic anxiety about Neighborhood House during her last illness had touched the girl, whose life had been devoted to the pursuit of pleasure.

Maggie should turn to the Neighborhood House in her hour of hurt pride only Providence could explain. To her the working girls toward whose comfort, education and pleasure her checks had contributed might as well have been in Persia or China, so little did she know them. In a vague sort of way she thought of them as moles who came out of their holes at night and blinking, even dully, enjoyed such pleasure as women of her kind provided for them.

So when she came upon Maggie Connolly face downward in the pillow of a cozy corner on that hot June Saturday, when all the rest of the Neighborhood girls had gone planckling, she stood looking down upon the tearful one with strange, brooding eyes. "My dear girl," she began, with that gentle air of patronage which is the refined cruelty of the rich toward the sensitive souls among the poor, "what has happened? Have you hurt yourself? Have you lost your purse?"

Maggie was nothing if not democratic. She did not ask Miss Natalie Burgess who she was or what she was doing there.

"Tom Devery's gone to the beach with that bleached blond at the next machine, Polly Maguire. Get that, will you?"

"But you must know lots of other young men who would be glad to take you to the beach. I saw them hanging on the cars like flies."

Maggie, who had wiped her eyes, now turned her scornful gaze upon her benefactress.

"I don't want to go with those fellows. I want just Tom."

The sudden break in her voice, the sudden gathering of mist over her blue eyes, brought revelation to the petted daughter of millions.

"It was like an echo from the night before. Not that she had put it into words. Not that she had so much as admitted to herself that she wanted to see one Thomas Witherspoon Brainard. But suddenly, like a flash of lightning across a dark landscape, she saw the panorama of her own heart."

She wanted Tom, the other tall, clean cut Tom, and she had always wanted him.

"What came between you and Tom?" she asked.

"What came between us? What comes between every girl like me and what she wants—trouble. Working overtime till I'm that ugly you can't cross your fingers at me, and the two children sick at home, and mother taking all I earn—I know she can't help that—and me so shabby in clothes no man would want to take me to the beach, and Tom is that particular. And Polly Maguire—she can spend all her wages on herself. She's got a new organdie that you can see through to the pink silk slip. Oh!"

"But if she's wanting to see one and she's dressed in very poor taste," said Natalie severely. "And a man who will forget you because your clothes are shabby is really not worth fretting for."

Maggie sat up very straight. "What do you know about wanting clothes? I bet you've got a dress for every day in the year, and when he comes you have an awful time thinking which one he'd like best, 'cause you've got so many. But when you haven't no good dress to your name and things go wrong at the factory—and, well, I said a few things and he said some, and he threw me down."

For a few moments Natalie Burgess sat quietly stroking the head of her newly acquired acquaintance and who had once more retired to the question of the comfort of the cushion. Then very gently she said: "Don't cry any more, Maggie. I guess being thrown down is something most women have to bear some time in their lives. It was not a question of dress with me, and I am quite sure I had said nothing. We never had a word. He just left town and never even said good-by."

Maggie stared at her, speechless with wonder. Her own troubles were forgotten. Some man had "thrown down" this radiant creature in soft gray silk and shimmering plumes?

Maggie's Tom had come back, and Maggie and Tom had been forgotten. Some man had "thrown down" this radiant creature in soft gray silk and shimmering plumes?

Have You Seen the 1908 Ford Auto?

IF YOU HAVEN'T, you must call on us and get a demonstration. Its the most powerful; the smoothest running; the easiest of control; the noiseless, and the most economical machine on the market today, both in first cost and in running expenses.

I will be in Chestertown in a few days to give a demonstration and prove all this to be true.

Don't buy an Auto until you see the FAMOUS FORD.
