A BEAUTIFUL WEDDING.

Never did the sunbeams sparkle more joyously over the face of nature and play hide and seek among the leaves and foliage on one of June's brightest mornings, than when the doors of old historic Shrewsbury Church, in upper Kent county, were opened wide to welcome friends, who came from far and near to witness the nuptials of the beloved rector's fair young daughter, Miss Susie U. Edson, to Mr. James P. Wason, of Indiana.

This old colonial church, standing among the classic oaks, whose bolls are circled with the century rings, away from the noisy commercial centres and active marts of wide-awake to-day, this dear old church was once one of the chief centres of religious interest in Maryland. Its foundation dates back to 1692, and from that date to the present time it has witnessed the coming and going of life's seasons within its walls, the passing of time, the passing of generations, the incoming of youthful hopes, the out-going of human joys and sorrows. But never in its long history has it witnessed a happier event than the social gathering of Wednesday, June 22nd, 1904. Beginning with the sunbeams, a scheme of glorious coloring began in the fields, and wayside flowers, the yellow-hearted daisies raised their snowy heads to adorn the wedding of the youthful bride and bridegroom. Wreaths of these natural blossoms adorned the walls and arches of the church and festooned the aisles and pews, their sunny centres casting a happy reflection on all the surroundings and beaming in responsive good natured smiles from the assembled congregation.

As the last stroke of 12 A. M. vanished down among the morning hours, the bridal party left the rectory and entered the dimly lighted church to the soft strains of the wedding music, rendered with exquisite skill by Miss Dixon, of Chestertown, assisted by the talented choir, Mrs. J. Clendaniel, Miss M. Comegys and Miss E. Pennington.

The six flower girls were singularly sweet, and interesting, ranging in order according to size, Margaret, Virginia and Evelyn Edson, Cynthia and Ruth Clendaniel and Mary Sutton, they carried bunches of the "beautiful, beautiful daisies," their dresses of white with yellow trimmings, forming a part of the daisy chain. The maid of honor, Miss Chamberlain, preceded the bride, both arrayed in white, the long flowing veil with its tiara of orange blossoms only enhanced the beauty of the fair bride, as she was led to the altar by her brother, Mr. Edson, of New York. The groom escorted by Mr. Wm. Wallis met the bridal party at the altar, where the betrothal and wedding ceremonies were performed by the rectors of Shrewsbury and Massey together. The organ music found echoes among the forest warblers outside whose joyous notes assimulated with those of the choir in praise and joy. The happy procession left the altar down the flower wreathed aisle carpeted with the snowy daisies cast by the child fairies, the lovely little bride's maids and so this charming procession with their most efficient ushers, Mr. P. G. Wilmer and Mr. Pennington wended their way across the green sward to one of the old historic oaks, whose great strong, wide spread boughs were extended lovingly to receive them like the famous "talking oak," of Summer Chace, "Upon whose towery top all throats that gurgle sweet all starry culminations drop Balm dews to bathe their feet," and so the reception was most picturesquely held under the oaks among the shimmering lights and shadows of June time. With the open welcome of the church, and the broad shelter of the great oaks, that have stood over a hundred years on guard, the rectory then added its hospitality and charm to the daisy chain of color and beauty and a most delicious and elaborate midnoon breakfast was offered to all of the assembled wedding guests, under the management of Mrs. Jas. Hurtt, who together with the ladies of Shrewsbury Parish are renowned for the quality and quantity of their viands on festive occasions, and whose open hearted hospitality on this occasion could only be compared to the good old times Befo' de wah."

At the table of the bridal party the elegant wedding cake was cut by the bride, and enjoyed by all, especially the single belles, who were eager to try its charms in a "Dream Ticket."

And so amid feasting, and laughter, and blessings, and jests, good wishes, good-byes, amid showers of rice, the youthful pair left the rectory home to go far away beyond the Alleghanies; beyond their utmost purple rim, to the region where love reigns, and whose dome is all star spangled on a rose colored sky.

Oh! the young Lochinvar is come, out of the West.
He is come for the maiden whom he loves best.
So faithful in love and so dauntless in war,
There never was knight like the young Lochinvar."

Betterton, June 23, 1904.
