JOHN BARTLEY

Business Advice by a Business Man.

Don't think no one else has a right to be in the same line of business as yourself.

Don't try to monopolize everything—the people are opposed to monopoly and like fair play.

You don't have to tell people you are honest—be honest and they will soon find it out.

Don't accuse any one of being bombastic and narrow-mined—it shows great weakness and people laugh at you.

Don't be egostistical—that is evidence that you are a fool and don't know it.

Don't boast about your success—the successful ones don't do it—it is bad taste and will react on you.

Don't speak unkindly of your neighbor—it does you more harm than it does him.

Have only a fair price for your goods and stick to it—that way you treat all alike.

Attend to your own business and you will find little time to attend to other people's.

And last, but not least, do unto others as you would others should do unto you.

By following these suggestions, being industrious, saving your money and judicious by advertising your business, you will gain a competency and respect for the autumn of life.

Scribner's Magazine.

Thomas F. Millard, who is in the East for Scribner's Magazine, contributes a most illuminating study of the "Financial Study of Japan." He has carefully gone into the present resources and the possibilities of the country for meeting the huge obligations which it has already piled up. The relation of Japan's industries and commerce to its debt-paying capacity are carefully expounded, from original resources.

Dwight L. Elmendorf's pictures of travel are well-known to thousands of people before whom he has lectured. None of them have ever been published except in Scribner's Magazine. In this number he writes of the ancient Roman ruins in North Africa, which are little known and visited; and they are illustrated with a series of striking pictures made from his tele-photographs during a recent visit.

JUST FOR FUN.

To Green.

A young man called on a young lady friend of his one night. Now it happened that this young lady had red hair, and he, thinking he would be cute, said to her: "Mary I would sit closer to you, but I'm afraid that your red hair will set me afire" "Oh, no danger of that, Henry" she replied "You're too green to burn.

A Happy Surprise.

Pat—What is the price of eggs here?

Grocer—Fifty cents a dozen, eggs are eggs now.

Pat—Faith and I am glad to hear it; them I got here the other day waz all chickens.

Big Bugs.

Boarder—"Say, landlord, that was a horrible bed I had last night."

Landlord—"That's strange, why I put all the big bugs that come to the hotel in that bed."

Boarder—"Yes I have no doubt of it, they nearly bit the life out of me last night."

Love's Dream.

Uncle Sam—"What's the name of that piece she is playing?"

Dora Day—"Love's dream."

Uncle Sam—"Umph—Must of dreamed that somebody was pricking him with a pin."

And She Covets the Job.

"Yes, people call me rich," said the boastful old bachelor, "but I assure you my money is a lot of of trouble to me." "And people do say" remarked Miss Willing, "that every man ought to have some woman to share his troubles."

Couldn't Get at it.

Farmer (just returned from London)—O, yes, I got on all right, bar on thing. There was a light burning in my bedroom all night, and I' m not accustomed to it.

Squire—Why didn' t you put it out?

Farmer—How could I? The blessed thing was inside a bottle.

Neighbors.

Mrs. Lawson—Are they good neighbors?

Mrs. Dawson—No; they always look sour when we go over there to use their telephone.

Not That Kind.

Newsboy (excitedly)—Poiper, extra! All about the terrible foire! Two thousand kids burnt up!

Old gentlemen—Here' s a quarter, boy.

Where was the fire?

Newsboy—In a glove factory.
