MORE PURE BRED RAMS OF QUALITY NEEDED

Within recent months a considerable number of Maryland sheepmen have indicated a desire to purchase purebred rams. Some have been interested in the possibility of securing both ewes and rams of pure breeding. Unquestionably, there is need for a greatly increased number of purebred flocks in the State, for many flock owners are now unable to secure from nearby breeders, the purebred rams needed for in their flocks. Growers of early lambs for market or for retaining in their flocks who have made use of good purebred rams are well pleased with the improvement which has been effected. In this connection a summary of a Tennessee experiment is of much interest.

Vice-Dean C. A. Willson, of the Tennessee Experiment Station, has supplied valuable information relative to the outcome of an experiment recently conducted in Tennessee to compare lambs sired by a scrub ram with lambs sired by purebred rams of four mutton breeds—Hampshire, Oxford, Shropshire and Southdown. The ewes which produced the lambs were native ewes. In all, 117 lambs were marketed.

The ninety-three lambs sired by the purebred mutton rams averaged 74.9 pounds in weight at an average of 100 days. These lambs brought $13.02 per head at Nashville on May 3, 1922.

The twenty-four lambs sired by the scrub ram were marketed the same day. They averaged 70.9 pounds in weight at 100 days of age. The scrub lambs brought $10.93 per head or $2.09 apiece less than the average price of lambs sired by purebred rams.

If it is assumed that a ram will sire thirty lambs each year, this average increased value at market of $2.09 per head would show an increase in gross returns of $62.70 on account of the use of a purebred mutton type ram.

The present seems to be a most advantageous time to begin the use of purebred mutton rams on a large number of Maryland farms where schrubs have thus far been too abundantly prevalent.

MRS. HOOKER GIVEN ONE CENT DAMAGES

Jury Finds For Plaintiff In Libel Suit Against The Sun — "Great Victory," She Says.

"We find for the plaintiff and we assess her damages at 1 cent."

This was the sealed verdict reached by the jury in the $100,000 libel suit of Mrs. Donald R. (Edith Haughton) Hooker against the A. S. Abell Company, publishers of the Morning and the Evening Suns.

The Morning Sun was accused by Mrs. Hooker of having misquoted her in an article saying that she had declared she had no objection to the marriage of white women and men of other races, provided love was present. The article was published February 22, 1922. The case was heard before Judge C. W. Heuisler in Superior Court, Part 1.

"I regard it as a great victory," Mrs. Hooker said as she received congratulations after the verdict was read. "But with the truth on our side we could not help but win." That it was regarded as a victory by her woman colleagues of the Just Government League was also shown by the way they crowded about her with congratulations immediately the verdict was rendered. Her many friends in Kent also regard it as a great victory. All the costs of the two weeks trial falls on the Sun.

The case was closed by the argument of Isaac Lobe Straus for Mrs. Hooker. Mr. Straus reviewed the whole case and referred to Mrs. Hooker as a "chosen servant of humanity, thinking and doing her utmost for the suffering, oppressed and lowly of the world." Her every thought and effort, he said, was toward serving people, and she had given her "money, time, mind, heart, and devotion to help people." Mr. Howard, he said, had tried to prejudice the jury by reading isolated extracts from Mrs. Hooker's book. This book, he said, substantiated the fact that Mrs. Hooker wanted to keep the racial stock pure and had written it in advocacy of that idea.

Hadaway Bros. had on display in their window the largest groundhog seen in this section for many years. Strange to say the fur of this animal which is as large as a raccoon, is not very valuable, there being scarcely any demand for them here. Skunks are becoming very plentiful in this section, the local passenger train having run into one on the railroad track a few days ago.

Robert G. Nicholson is doubling the capacity of his ice plant here in order to take care of their greatly increased trade during the summer and early fall. New machinery is being installed.
