NEWS EDITORS OF CENTURY AGO HAD DIFFICULT TASK

Modern Telephone Methods Have Worked Many Changes in Journalism

With a telephone at his elbow and wire service to every corner of the country and worldwide cable and radio communication constantly at his disposal, the modern newspaper editor rarely stops to count his blessings or to contrast them with the handicaps under which the members of his profession labored a century ago.

The telephone has supplanted the "leg-man"—the reporter who went out on an assignment and hurried back to the office to write it in time to catch the earliest possible edition. The news gatherer now covers his assignment, but saves precious minutes and perhaps hours by telephoning the story to his office, where it is either transcribed verbatim as dictated or handled by "rewrite men" who simply take the details and write the story themselves.

But even the reporter of the old school was an advance over the news-gathering facilities of an earlier generation, when the editor had to depend largely upon the assistance of interested readers for much of the information purveyed through his columns.

The New York Evening Post recently reprinted from its issue of September 22, 1809, an item which illustrates the difficulties attending the task of the editor at that time. Under the caption, "Information Wanted," the article makes this plea to the public:

"The editor has been waiting some days in hopes that some person would furnish him with facts which led to the disaster which on Monday last befell the Grand Tammany Sachem, William Mooney, who lately presided over the Almshouse, in his removal. Surely the citizens have a right to be informed of such things. Will any person, acquainted with the circumstances, communicate them to the editor?"

Another reprinted item, which originally appeared in the same paper under date of July 10, 1826, strikingly illustrates the almost complete isolation of the various sections of the country because of inadequate means of communication. When it is recalled that today the news of the death of any famous man is carried by telegraph and telephone to remote parts of the country within a few hours after it occurs, the editor's comment on the death of Adams and Jefferson assumes added significance.

He says: "The newspapers of the North and East are filled with remarks upon the death of John Adams, while those from the South are equally engaged with the obsequies of Jefferson, neither section having yet heard of the loss sustained by the other. How much is the surprise at each extremity of the country destined to be increased by the information which is now traveling from the South to the North, and from the North to the South!"

SAYS SCHOOLS SLIGHT TRAINING IN SPEECH

Training for business should begin in the first grade of the public school in the opinion of Allan M. Cartter, superintendent of training of the New York Telephone Company. Mr. Cartter does not insist that courses in accounting and business methods be begun thus early, but argues that the age of five or six is not too soon to begin teaching the correct pronunciation of words and clear enunciation which he declares are a very important part of the child's training for efficiency in business and for success in life.

"There seems to be a lack of any real effort on the part of our schools to train children to pronounce their words properly and to enunciate clearly," the New York Globe quotes him as declaring. "Not only is this true, but experience with applicants for positions with the telephone companies is constantly proving that young people cannot even read aloud properly."

The remedy, in Mr. Cartter's opinion lies in individual training, both in the home and at school. Each child should be studied to discover his or her deficiencies or needs, and should then be given such drills as will be individually beneficial. Exercises for the proper control of the lips, tongue and teeth in speech should be conducted regularly. Training in reading aloud, now confined to the first few grades, should, he declares, be continued through a child's school career.

TAKES EIGHT HOURS TO MAKE LONDON-TO-AMSTERDAM CALL

There is always a waiting list, during business hours, for the use of the European long distance telephone lines, and, says a recent article in the London Times, "London traffic for Geneva and other towns takes its turn at Paris with waiting French bookings." Even calls from London to Amsterdam or Rotterdam may require as long as eight hours to go through, if "booked after 10 A. M." says the Times, while calls to Paris, Antwerp, or Brussels "may take three hours to become effective."

UNITED PRESS BOYS REUNITED BY PHONE

The 3 P. M. telephone call from the United Press was announced by the tinkle of the long distance bell in the inner office of a Western newspaper one afternoon. As he had done every day for two months, Henry A. Youmans, of the paper's editorial force, went inside to get the latest world's news from the U. P.

As for two months past, a Voice—merely an impersonal unembodied Voice—so far as Mr. Youmans was concerned, began droning off the news events.

"Red Arrow men congregating in Madison—" began the Voice.

"All right, give us what there is of that," responded H. A., "that's my old division, and I'm interested."

"Yours?" queried the Voice.

"Yep," responded H. A., "I was in the 120th Infantry of the 32nd Division."

"Huh! The dickens you were," said the Voice, "I was in the 120th Artillery of the Red Arrows. Who are you anyway?"

"I'm Hank Youmans," responded the Freeman man. "Who are you?"

"I'm your old friend Bill Cramer, why didn't you tell me before whom I was talking to?"

"Why didn't you say you were Bill?" Mr. Youmans retorted. "You don't suppose I knew I was talking to every day, do you?"

And the two young men gossiped for a few minutes on U. P. long distance toll, renewing old recollections of days "over there," of buddies who had "gone west," or trials and tribulations long since over, and they pledged each other to meet in Madison.

RADIO IS BOOMED IN CAPITAL CITY

Broadcasting from its radio station in Washington, a concert that is at that moment being given in New York City, the Cheasapeake and Potomac Telephone Company by using the long distance telephone wires of the Bell System has written a new Chapter in the history of radio.

On the roof of the telephone company in Washington is located one of the most powerful radio broadcasting stations in the country with a radius of between 500 and a thousand miles, depending upon the atmospheric conditions. The machinery used is practically the same as that used by all the up-to-date broadcasting stations, but by utilizing the long distance wires of the Bell System it is possible to bring the concerts of WEAF, the broadcasting station of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, to Washington where they are broadcast simultaneously with the New York Company.

The tremendous advantages to accrue from this possibility are manifold. Many radio fans have small inexpensive radio receiving sets that will not "pick up" a station as far distant as New York City, whereas they are near enough to Washington to hear distinctly the programs of WCAP, the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company's official designation. But it is readily recognized that Washington does not have the galaxy of stars from which to draw in selecting musical talent that is at the disposal of New York. Hence the telephone engineers got to work with the result that they, to all intent and purposes, moved WEAF in New York City to Washington by wire and from Washington broadcast concerts being held in studios and theatres in New York City.

Thousands of letters, some received from points as far distant as Maine, Illinois and Georgia, testify to the success of the new venture, and express the hope that these New York programs will be continued.

Owing to what radio experts term "static trouble," many of the large Eastern cities often cannot be heard by local radio "fans." So far, this difficulty is one of the mysteries of radio, but now the telephone engineers have solved the problem by transmitting the program to a different locality over the company's wires, where it is broadcast under favorable conditions.

The new radio plant is the largest Eastern station south of Philadelphia and north of Atlanta. It cast $50,000, and includes all of the latest improvements in radio broadcasting.
