Syracuse Trtp Made Deep Impression On Farmers

Glowing Reports Of An Enjoyable And Beneficial Tour Being Made By All Who Attended The Dairy ShowStock Exhibit Represented the Best That Champion Breeders Of World Produce.

Local dairymen who last week made the long planned trip to the National Dairy Show, at Syracuse, came home with glowing reports of a pleasant and beneficial trip throughout. Roads, weather conditions, means of transportation, accommodations at hotels, marvelous sights at the exposition and the beautiful scenery of Eastern Pennsyavlnia and Southern New York seem to have combined according to the dairymen, in creating an ideal week's pleasure.

Bright and early on Monday, October 8th, the Queen Anne's contingent left Centreville in a commodious bus secured from the Slocum Company, of Cambridge. A few farmers were picked up en route to Church Hill, and one at Chestertown, and the fifteen men and a driver then occupied all of the available space in the bus secured. The route lay through Elkton to Wilmington, where a stop was made to imbibe coffee and softer drinks. From Wilmington to Reading, Pa., was the next jump, and a good dinner was there served to the hungry crew. From Reading on to Allentown, and from Allentown to Scranton marked a two hundred and eighty mile jaunt in one day. Our party nighted over at the Jermyn at Scranton, after having passed certain extremely unavoidable comments upon Pennsylvania's prime coal country. Next morning the final shove for Syracuse landed the Dairymen at the New York State Fair Grounds at about three o'clock in the afternoon. A little scrimmage at the crowded gate to secure tickets and the fight to see the world's best Dairy Show was on.

No man can describe in a few words all the wonders of a show that endeavors to uphold its advertising as the Biggest and Best Dairy Exposition in the history of the world. Some there may be who think that a pen can describe all that a brain retained of the sights that eyes beheld at the show, but it is impossible. If one can imagine some twenty acres of land covered by pavillions filled with world's champions, where space is vied for years in advance by the most perfect specimens of cattle and horseflesh that ingenuity can bring about through selective breeding, then one will have some idea of the magnitude and quality of the 1923 Dairy Show. Ideal cattle were ideally shown in ideal show rings surrounded by an arena with seating space for ten thousand people, and the fact that the arena was crowded was among the least remarkable items. Aryshires and Guernsey, Brown Swiss and Jerseys and Holsteins paraded in the cork show ring arrayed in all the splendor of show condition and led by white uniformed attendants wearing oftimes the insignia of some world famous farm. Each contestant seemed to have brought to the Show only his best, and yet the entries ran well beyond thirteen hundred.

But the Cattle Show was not all of the Exposition. Down at the back of the Grounds two huge stables housed the blanketed beauties that came in proudly from Canada and the United States to represent the best in the Show world. The nightly Horse Show held in the big ring of the Grounds gave the horses a fair chance to show their gaits and manners in a contest open to the world. The Horse Show was exceptionally fine.—Centreville Record.

A REASON FOR SO MUCH HOG CHOLERA IN AUTUMN

One of the perplexing questions in connection with hog cholera always has been why we have the most extensive outbreaks of the disease in the fall.

Many theories have been advanced as a solution of this problem. Some contend that feeding green corn is at least a predisposing cause. Others insist that it is due to the exchange of help between farms, that is, farmers going from one place to another to assist in threshing, silo filling, etc., and that they carry the infection from sick to well hogs.

In this regard, we believe that when the final history of hog cholera has been written the feeding of infected pork to the hogs will be found to be responsible for a large number of the late summer and fall outbreaks.

It has been proven beyond a doubt where farmers cure and smoke their own pork, the supply begins to run short early in the fall. Even through the supply of cured meat is abundant, the family after eating it for several months demand a change of diet and fresh pork is bought at this season of the year for table use. When threshing and silo filling crews visit a farm, the house-wife is often at a loss to know the kinds of meat to serve. Beef, of course, is put before the men until they hope they will never seen another piece of it, but pork is usually purchased at at least one or more meals while the men are at the place.

On most farms hogs are used more or less as garbage disposal plants. When pork is served for table use, bones, rinds or scraps of it frequently reach the hogs by way of the swill pail.

It has been proven beyond a doubt that hog cholera is transmitted by infected pork. It is a well known fact that hogs fed on garbage containing trimmings of purchased pork are frequently exposed to hog cholera, for the reason that such pork often proves infectious. In Maryland over a four year period, it has been found than 82 per cent of the new outbreaks are apparently due to the feeding of garbage, table refuse or kitchen swill containing bones, rinds or scrape of pork.

In the corn belt, the shipping in of stocker hogs is undoubtedly responsible for many new outbreaks. However, when the data on the subject has been obtained, the large number of outbreaks that will have been found to be due to feeding infected pork will be astonishing.
