Fire At Salisbury. — Salisbury was visited Saturday noon by a conflgration which destroyed property valued at nearly $30,000, and threatened the destruction of the immense manufacturing plant of Jackson Bros. Co., valued at more than $100,000. The fire started on the top of W. B. Miller's kindling wood factory and as a gale was blowing from the southwest the flames were soon beyond the control of the firemen, who fought desperately to confine them to the mill and by so doing save the three large storage warehouses near by. This was impossible, and soon the four buildings, stored full of dry kindling wood, were a mass of fire, rendering it impossible to get within a hundred feet of them. The flames soon enveloped the residence of Joshua Morris and the dwelling adjoining, owned by Judge and occupied by Frank Bonneville, directly across the street from the mill. These buildings were consumed in a few minutes. Desperate efforts had to be made to save the plant of the Jackson Bros. Co. The full force of the Fire Department was augmented by the force of men employed by the Jacksons. who brought into use all the fire apparatus around the mill. Nothing but the direction of the wind, which drove the flames away from the big mill saved that building.

Mr. Miller's loss is more than $25,000. The kindling wood mill will cost $7,500. The three warehouses about $3,000. There was stored in the warehouses 2,000,000 bundles of kindling wood, worth $10,000, besides material enough to bundle 1,300,000 more bundles, worth nearly $4,000. Mr. Miller has about $13,000 insurance, $5,000 on the mill and the balance on the warehouses and stock. Mr. Miller employed nearly 75 girls and men and had a payroll of between $300 and $400.

Before the battle at "Caulk's Field."

Incident in the War of 1814 of interest to Kent Countians.

BY B. FRANK HILL, of BALTIMORE, MD.

It was during the time Sir Peter Parker was maintaining his blockade of the Chesapeake Bay that Elijah Jones, (according to the story told by his son, Wm. Jones), was plying his trade, which was that of a fisherman, and had pitched his tent on Worton Point, which he made his headquarters, using a trunk of a tree for the support of his tent. He had just hauled in his tent when he observed the English Commander approaching the shore, in his gig, under a flag of truce, and Jones, it is said, overheard the following conversation between the American and English officers.

Having reached the shore, Sir Peter said, "Gentlemen, I want some fresh meats, I must have it, and I am willing to pay whatever you may ask."

"Well," said our Col., "there is plenty of it up in the field if you care to go up there for it."

"Gentlemen," said Sir Peter, "I don't want to kill or be killed but I must have fresh meat, name your price and I will pay it."

Our Col. again told him if he wanted it, he would have to go after it.

Seeing entreaties were in vain, Sir Peter politely said, "Good morning gentlemen," entered his gig and sullenly gave the order to "Give Way." Hardly had he boarded his ship when a shot from his vessel struck the tree over Jones' tent, cutting it completely off, and our Col. seeing what a good mark it made, ordered the tent down.

Another shot tore the chimney from the house on the farm, and another went through the top of the house.

Our Col. felt certain the English would try to land that night, and being inferior in numbers, he moved the Army further back, leaving three negro women in the house.

About midnight the English landed, some of the officers going into the house. One of the negro women had a small wooden box filled with biscuits. An English officer, supposed to be an Ensign, noticing the box, demanded it, but the negro begged to be allowed to keep the box and said she was willing to give up what was inside. The Englishman took it however but assured her that he would bring it back, and he did, but not in the way he supposed.

Near morning the English had found the cattle and the cracking of guns, as they killed the cattle, was heard by the Americans. Our soldiers were divided one half was to make a circuit to the shore, and the other half to cut across the field and so hem the English in, but the ones who were to cut across the field did so too quick and the English retreated toward the shore. The Americans followed firing on the English as they embarked, many of the English being wounded and some killed. After the English embarked, our soldiers were ordered to drop behind a log fence; hardly had the order been given when a shot from the English ship struck the fence throwing the logs high in the air but our soldiers being on the ground, the fence went over their heads not injuring one man.

Among the dead which floated ashore was found the body of an English officer, and upon examination, a wooden box was found inside of his shirt, he being none other than the officer that took the box from the negro. It was returned to her.

The authority for this story is William Jones, a watchman employed by the late C. Morton Stewart, now residing at 1900 Canton Ave., and he himself having, when a young man, fished where his father had fished years before.

Terrible Accident.—A frightful accident occurred near Waterloo, Delaware, on Saturday morning last. Mrs. Joseph James had put out the usual weekly family washing and began making the winter's supply of soap. She had put the grease and lye into the boiling water, when she was called into the house In some unaccountable manner she struck her two-year-old child as she turned, knocking the prattling baby into the seething pot. The child fell head foremost, and before the mother, who seemed dazed, could act, the child was dead.

Disgrace Of An Eloper.—Mitchel H. German, the wealthy brick manufacturer who left his home in Delmar on August 26th with nearly $20,000 and the wife of Frank Harmoson, returned home Thursday morning. German left his paramour in Philadelphia and travelled through Europe. Two weeks ago he returned to New York and wrote his heart-broken wife. She joined him at once and accompanied him home.
