CHOKED AND ROBBED BY BURLY NEGRO

Miss Louise Nugent, of Chestertown, Attacked With Pistol While Returning From Her Work in Baltimore City.

Standing alongside of James Smith, a negro six feet tall, whom she accused of being her assailant, pretty Miss Louise Nugent, 17 years old, told Justice Loden at the Western Police Station, Baltimore, Sunday morning that she was held up, forcibly borne into a dark street and robbed of her pocket-book containing $2.50, at the point of a big revolver, after having been made to inhale some strong drug. As convincing testimony of the rough handling to which she was subjected, the girl showed vivid red marks on her neck, where, she said, the footpad had choked her. Smith declared he had never seen Miss Nugent before, but he was committed for the action of the Grand Jury.

There were furtive signs of terror still in the girl's eyes as she rehearsed the experience that befell her as she was going down Franklin street to her home, at 426 North Fremount street, about 11.30 o'clock, from the department store where she is employed. She identified Smith by a scar on his cheek, which she had noticed in the light from a street lamp.
