TO ENRICH OYSTER BEDS

PACKERS AND GROWERS PLAN TO BOOM THE INDUSTRY.

Governor Hears Discussion—He Commends Aim of Association to Improve Conditions—Amendments to Laws Suggested.

"Discuss freely this great oyster question, for it is from the differences of opinion expressed that we must extract the first principles of truth."

Thus spoke Governor Crothers to the 500 or more members of the Maryland Oyster Association at a special session at the Hotel Rennert, and his counsel was the entering wedge which opened wide the subject of Maryland's most important industry, with all of its innermost workings, its handicaps and its probable future exposed to view.

The meeting was called by the officials of the association to discuss plans looking to the adoption of certain amendments to the present oyster laws to be presented to the next Legislature as the sentiment of the allied oyster interests of Maryland. Mr. W. H. Killian, president of the organization, was chairman.

"This is a great question," said Governor Crothers, when he addressed the association. "No one man knows all about the oyster question. Now is the time to discuss it thoroughly. I am in a general way interested in its solution, and will be most gratified for any light that may be thrown upon it. In the solution, however, I could not suggest any specific method for I have appointed a commission to investigate the subject and to go into the various details. I must later pass upon the findings of this commission officially, so I am not free to express my private views.

"I have never had the apprehension of some people about a conflict of opinions. It is only in this way that we can get at the truth. Of course, in such a broad question as this, there are different interests which it would be difficult to harmonize, but a solution can be reached which will be fair to all. If it is right, there can come no harm to anyone. It is the special legislation for the few that may result in injustice to others."

"Is oyster planting in Maryland under existing law profitable?" was the first of these questions. The answer was "No."

"Would oyster planting in close proximity to natural beds with privilege to work such beds with powerboats at any time, be advisable?" There was a diversity of opinion, and the discussion branched off into narrow channels, with the result that it remained unanswered.

"Would the closing of depleted natural areas for two or three years for recuperation be an advisable experiment?" Again there was a decided difference of opinion, but the sentiment of the majority seemed to be that the experiment was worth trying.

"Would the shelling of depleted areas by the State be advisable?" This question precipated a discussion as to the efficiency of the law. If the shells were spread judiciously, it was argued, and by State officials who conscientiously did their duty, the result undoubtedly would be of the greatest benefit in replenishing the supply of oysters on the natural bars. If, however, the order were given under the present system it would amount to little, said some packers.

"Would it be advisable to permit the taking up of unculled seed oysters for planting purposes from restricted areas after the close of the season, such seed not to be carried out the State?" Here the far-seeing packers spoke in assent, and even among those who were not over-enthusiastic, it was conceded that the culturist should be given this means of keeping up his beds.

Question of Culling.

"Should the present cull law be strictly enforced, particularly as regards the culling upon the bars where caught?" The announcement of this question was received with applause, and upon first impression it was evident that the association was upon the point of voicing a vigorous assent. Before an expression was asked for, however, President Killian counseled a thorough discussion of the present cull law. Thereupon followed a debate which continued more than an hour and which was barely concluded when the meeting adjourned shortly after 5 o'clock.

Many members advocated an amendment to the law, raising the present requirement of 2½ inches from mouth to hinge at which oysters may be marketed to 3 inches. This met with vigorous protests from others who were in favor of a suspension of the operation of the present law in respect to certain natural bars, where, they said, oysters never grow to a size exceeding 2 or 2½ inches. Chief among the dissenters was Mr. Thomas H. Webster, of Baltimore.

From the opinions expressed by representatives of nearly every oyster county of Maryland, a special committee, who heard the debates, must glean the prevailing sentiment and prepare a set of resolutions embodying the changes in the present laws advocated by the association. This committee, headed by President Killian, includes also Messrs. Grayson Winterbottom, of Cambridge; E. B. Wayman, of Baltimore; Robert H. Jones, of Fairmount, and Thomas H. Webster. Messrs. Killian, Winterbottom and Webster are members of the Governor's oyster commission, to which the resolutions, which will be completed will be presented.
