FARMERS, ATTENTION

Will They Be Mixed Up With Club Women And Women Suffragists?—A Lesson From Pennsylvania's Legislature.

To The Editor:

It is a piece of superlative impudence on the part of some rich club women suffragists of Baltimore to attempt dictating to the Maryland farmers what is for their best interests. If they are worthy of being allied to anything it is to finance, commerce and manufacture, and not to agriculture; but not even in their own home are they received with the honor they crave, as just the other day the Mayor and City Council of Baltimore gave them a humiliating rebuff when they pretentiously pranced in with a petition relating to school matters. On the Baltimore school fight they have been with the Van Sickle class against the mass and have proved by that act alone that they are totally foreign to the worker and the farmer. Correspondents of the Baltimore papers have so dubbed them.

Among the aforesaid leading club women and women suffragists are Mrs. Hooker, Mrs. Elliott, Mrs. Miller and Mrs. Benjamin W. Corkran, Jr., of Roland Park, Baltimore county. Baltimore city, a commercial center, and Alleghany county, a mining center, have compulsory education, and now these women want to put it on the farmers in the other counties of the State. They say it is imperatively needed for their best interests generally, while from a political view it is impossible to see men vote intelligently or to see legislators raised up to act wisely without. In fact, they say there can be no representative and Democratic government if it is not incorporated as law for the making of good citizens in every particular.

I have recently shown how compulsory education has made abandoned farms and vagrants in the great State of New York. Now come the papers from Pennsylvania showing how it has made the corrupt Legislators of that State. The Grange and local papers of the State are showing exactly where the legislators raised up under compulsory education direct, work arduously for the taxation and spoilation of the farmer. To begin with the legislators are not called statesmen, but have reached such a depth of depravity that they are, like cut-throats and robbers, called "the Gang." Here are a few of the things the gang did inimical to the farmers: It handed them a huge tax budget; it made immense uncalled for State appropriations; it thrust upon the farmers an obnoxious road law; it killed the Iniative and Referendum, which they wanted and by which they would have had a direct voice in government; it created a myriad of new jobs; it raised salaries promiscuously; it totally ignored reform along the farmers' line, and the farmers came to the conclusion that it adopted the Jay Gould slogan of "The people be damned." From the actions of this Gang we might suppose that the compulsory test books the members studied held up the farmers as an object fit only to be cut and plucked. Talking about new jobs, compulsory education would make a lot of them—from State Superintendent of compulsory education to truant officer, and we would very quickly see one of the rich club woman or women suffragists taking the former job at $5,000 a year salary, with the joy of lording it thrown in.

As the Maryland primaries are now over, and as the aforesaid club women and women suffragists are laying plans to win every candidate for compulsory education, so, on the other hand the farmers should see to it that every candidate stands for them alone. Our last Legislature furnished one bright and shining convert of the club women in the person of the school teacher who introduced their compulsory bill with as much gusto as a cow boy on a broncho in a circus ring. He was going to fight it right through. He was soon knocked out in the press, and then resorted to threats of personal violence upon those who longer associated his name with his bill. This failing, he got a gang to threaten the same. Thus the crusade supposed to be carried on by women of the highest intelligence, in the interests of intelligence and good citizenship, resolved itself down to the plane of the ignoramus and the rowdy. Respectable farmers of Maryland should not allow their Legislature to be disgraced by such proceedures in the future.

Section 8.
