FINDS HIS SISTER

Jimmy, The Umbrella Man, Receives Information From People in Ireland—Sends Remembrance.

Jimmy "Smith," the well-known umbrella mender, and one of the greatest walkers in Maryland, has found his relations who live in Ireland. Jimmy came to America about thirty years ago and has knocked about the Eastern part of the country ever since mending umbrellas and doing odd jobs. Recently he purchased an ark and removed it to a lot opposite Chester cemetery where he lives alone. Jimmy, however, has not been happy. He has been troubled by a mysterious spirit so much that he inserted the following advertisement in the Philadelphia Record:

$200 REWARD.

To the man who can give the answer and explanation for this I will give $200, viz.: Can a man be under an article and invisible to the eye, but enabled to exercise an undue and invisible influence over another? If so, how is it done? Address KENT NEWS, Chestertown, Maryland.

Among the replies were the following:

"If the man who exercised the influence you mentioned is a hypnotist and you were ever consciously or unconsciously brought under his influence he could by past hypnotism influence you at will at any time he might designate regardless of distance, time or covening. Another way, if you think or believe any man or woman or power can exercise an influence over you, then you open the way for the use of that power or influence. On the other hand if you assert your freedom from outside influences, assert the "mastery of your will" no power can exert any influence over you.

"'As a man thinketh so is he.'" If you think you can be influenced by that very thought you can and you thereby open the way to be influenced.

"'Deny the power of persons, circumstances or things to adversely influence you. Assert your realty, power and dominion over these things,' and be free.

"You may call this spiritualism, christian science, yogi philosophy or what you will, the facts remain it is 'Truth.'"

"A man under a bed is the answer. Awakening from an apparently sound sleep, in a room where there was sufficient light to have seen any object, I was aware of the presence of some person, that consciousness of a person being near, yet hearing nothing and on looking around seeing nothing but found later that an intruder was hiding under the bed. The influence was peculiar, undue, yet so pressing as to incite fear and almost overpowering. Invisible yet so very near. Is not this a correct solution?"

Various experiments have been tried to baffle this influence and Jimmy thinks he has the remedy.

Some weeks ago an effort was made to find his people whom he left in Lurgan county, Ireland. The Postmaster and Protestant Episcopal minister were addressed and asked for information concerning the family but it was many days before any news came and when it arrived there was some suspicion as to the identity. In order to be sure of it he asked the parties to send a photograph of Mary Ann, his favorite sister. After some days the photo came and he recognized the face at once as that of his sister whom he had not seen for 29 years. He had the picture framed and it now adorns his "ark." Immediately upon receipt of picture "Jimmy" sent a part of his savings to be divided among his four sisters.

Jimmy is industrious and honest and his cry of "umbrellas to mend" familiar to the people of this Peninsula.

DRESS REFORM

Drastic reforms involving uniform dress for women, the abolition of men dressmakers, exploiters of fashion, were recommended by Mrs. Catherine Carter Warren, wife of Professor Howard Warren, of Princeton, and President of the New Jersey Federation of Women's Clubs, in a striking address before the Michigan Federation at Detroit.

"Women's clubs of New Jersey seek a saner fashion of dress, the abolition of puffs." It was some moments before she could continue on account of applause. "A curtailment in the length of the hat pin, and above all, a saner Christmas.

"We want a uniform dress and we strenuously object to the sweeping changes of fashion that say you must wear one kind of a dress one year, and another the next. Last season's dress is no good this season, and we want reforms that enable a woman to wear the same dress the next summer that she did this summer and not always the constant drain on the husband's finances.

"Women should by this time be in a state of revolution against the outrage of fashion's dictation to them. The monstrous hats that are worn should be ruled out of style for good. Women should be educated in the art of spending their husband's money wisely. Why not now establish schools to teach women how to manage their households in an economical manner."

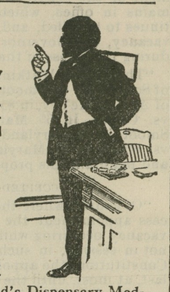

THE DUTY OF THE PRESS

In our every day life something always occurs that requires determination on our part, the forming of a decision, that will result in good or ill. We reach it by a rapid review of past experiences, logically, or by giving way to the crying products of ages, intuitively. Nothing is ever decided upon, nothing ever done, that is not influenced by our past impressions, or the lives of our ancestors, as in literature, the genius of Homer influenced Virgil, and Dante later bowed before Virgil, his master and his model. The one thing that the public reads, in this day of tragedy and strife, the one thing that is considered and weighed is the newspaper, and the life of the public is moulded and influenced by it in its daily actions, though it knows it not.

How important is it then for the press to present only its best thought to its patrons, and how necessary is it that all public questions should be discussed in its columns? No subject will ever arise to which there are not two sides. Man has ever doubted, and it is only by a full and free discussion that vital questions are ever rightly determined.
