GUARDED AGAINST FIRE—Almost imperceptible from the ground, rings of sprinklers are attached to each level of the State House dome. A touch of a button and tons of water drench the wooden hull. This photograph was taken during one of the semiannual tests of the fire equipment in the State House, the oldest Capitol still in use in the United States.

Annapolis to Open Its Colonial Doors In Heritage Week

Thousands Expected for Tours In Third Annual Celebration

By GEORGE FLYNN
Star Staff Writer

msa_sc6008_1_1-0963.jpg