Tourists view the House chamber. More than 30,000 persons, from every state and United States possession, are expected to visit there this year.

Visitors see the old Senate chamber, where the Continental Congress accepted Washington's resignation as commander in chief of the Continental Army on December 23, 1783.

The spot on which Washington stood in resigning, above, and the State House dome, below, excite great interest.

Although it is Maryland's third State House, this one, built in 1772, is still the nation's oldest structure of the kind that is in continual use. This is the Governor's reception room.
