POETRY.

[For the Cambridge Democrat.] TO MY MOTHER IN BALTIMORE. Mother, when darkness veils the light, And dusky eve comes on; When I've retired for the night,

And all to rest are gone. I think of thee, and wish that I Was sitting by thy side; And happy moments now passed by, Before my vision glide.

And, mother, whilst I'm locked in sleep, I oftime dream of thee, And think I hear thy voice speak Kind words of love to me.

I think I see samiliar forms, I ofthave seen at home; But when I'm freed from fancy's charms,

I find myself alone! And, mother, of with lifted eyes, raise my voice to heaven, By whom all things are given.

To guide aright my mother, whom In youth taught me to pray, And give to her beyond the tomb, A joyous, endless day. ar Beckwith's Channel. Md. 1 ULYSES.
