Ah! whither dost thou roam O'er this wild world a ranger, Hast thou no fri nos nor home?" "They called me blue eyed Mary, When friends and fortune smiled; But ah! how fortunes vary-I new am sorrow's child.

Young William was my lover, I thought our hearts were join'd, But ah! he's proved a rover, And Mary's left behind. With these boquets and posies How pensively I stray, And cry "who'll buy my roses?

And cheer my weary way." "Come here - I'll buy thy flowers -To ease thy hapless lot;

All wet with morning showers, I'll buy-torget me not." "Kind sir, then take these roses, They're fading like my youth-But never like these posies, Shall wither Mary's truth "

Then gazed at her the stranger, And clasped her to his breast-"No more I'll be a ranger, For William now is bless'd." The youth was known to Mary-She then in rapture smil'd, And said "How fortunes vary-
