I know a sweet young girl, With a voice like a singing bird's, And 'tis bliss to look on her lovely face And list to her joyous words-Oh, many a heart will madly pine For her-that sweet young Caroline.

I know a fair young girl, With an eye like the sky's own blue, Or a sweet Spring flower when its azure leaves Are bright with the early dew-Oh, a thing half earth and half divine

Is she—that fair young Caroline. I know a bright young girl, And her every thought's a gem, A lovelier diamond than ever flashed From a kingly diaden-

Oh, her soul a blessed star will shine In Heaven—that bright young Caroline.

THE TASE. An Affecting Story of the Mountain Lovers.

BY LEIGH HUNT.

Not many years ago, we read in a book the story of a lover who was to win his mistress by . A poetical "lover" not long since sent the folhow he did win her, and how they ended their lowing to Sally Ann, his lady love; days on the same spot.

We think the scene was in Switzerland, but the mountain, though high enough to tax his stout heart to the uttermost must have been among the lowest. Let us fancy it a good lofty hill, in the summer time. It was, at any rate, so high that the father of the lady, a proud noble, thought it impossible for a young man, burdened, to scale it. For this reason alone, in scorn he bade him do it, and his daughter should be his.

The peasantry assembled in the valley to witness so extraordinary a sight. They measured the mountain with their eyes; they communed with one another, and shook their heads; but all admired the young man, and some of his fellows, look- Composition Cake.—One pound of flonr, one of Ireland, also had a tilt on the some evening. ing at their mistresses, thought they could do as sugar, half a pound of butter, seven eggs, half a Smith O'Brien was still in prison, where he had little is said thereon, either in conversation or by
