THE INVOLUNTARY INCONSTANT. 149.

“ came, (for I don’t lodge in the house
“ with my sifter) but I could get no
“ very satisfactory answer, where, nor
“ with whom; they have their secrets;
“ who this sick man is, I cannot for “ my life imagine, but as the people
“ of the house told me, they went out
“ together in a post-chaise; and about
“ an hour after that, came this other “ post-chaise; a post-chaise and four,
“ at your request, to fetch away Ca-
“ milla.” “ At my request! Heavens!
“ Mr. Francfort; I fetch away your “ sifter! We have been deceived, she “ is gone off with this man, whoever
“ he is, and to save appearances, went
“ in a chaise alone. Oh! Sir, she has “ joined him long ere this; it is vain,
