

particular schemes; and if I had carried my point, why you would have carried your's, and your demands upon me would have been greater; the labourer is worthy of his hire; but to expect something for nothing is the devil. All that can be said is, that we have been unlucky in our schemes, and we must make the best of it. I shall always be glad to see Charles Francfort, nor would I have him consider as ungrateful

G. GRANDON.