

the heart - & it struck me that that might have been the cause of the death -

If person was stabbed when this perforation was the blood would flow from within the without - These ~~stigmata~~ offered to me to be remarkably bloody. - as much so as any wound that could be seen in the flanks; for which I inferred that the subject bore a death I should think the age of the subject was from 50 to 60 yrs of age - judge that by the white hairs the opening of the skin - & effluence of blood.

The body was unusual in form it was narrow across the shoulders - the legs left - not so much as usual - & straighter up & down than what was common; and disproportionately long for its size; & corresponded in these respects and in colour of hair & general appearance of the skin to Dr P. body; he had a peculiar formation, & it seems to me that this was the same - Nothing distinctive for blood should have expected to have found in his body but all just as I should have expected -

X