

taken out as it would be taken out by a physician at an ordinary post mortem Exam.ⁿ I was also struck with the separation of the upper part ^{of the breast bone} from the collar bone & the route which the knife could pass through is such that a person unacquainted with anatomy would be likely to follow the knife - There is but one way in which a knife could pass & knowledge of that way would imply knowledge of anatomy.

I thought the separation of hip for thigh indicated knowledge of the joint, just as much as the incision was made directly to the hip. I did not observe how the head was separated by the ordinary dissection "saw" but it would be likely to be used, but I have known it used for such purposes.

I did not examine the bones when laid together to see if they all belonged to one subject but saw nothing inconsistent - My attention was called only, as I considered to the bones.

I should say the age of the subject was past the middle period of life - the skin was very thin -

Nothing occurred to me as to the force. When the thorax was turned over, I was struck with the quantity of hair, there was on this subject - The hair was on each side of
