

There is also an entrance to the lower laboratory through the door in the dissecting room entry - the door on left of the furnace that warms the lecture room - the door by which coal is put in. A punner was taken out of that door & hung on hinges to admit air to the furnace. A person could get in - or put in a small bag - when the door could be opened. Or, he could with a stick unbolt the door if bolted inside. The other (inner) door was not locked; the fire key was in that door
