

---

---

Acknowledgments

---

---

We are a teaching team that writes about constitutional law with journalists' eyes and ears. Where possible we have sought out the primary players in the personal dramas which have given birth to landmark cases and resonate with the force of constitutional law. It is to all the "original casts" who spent hours telling us their stories that we owe an immeasurable debt. Norma McCorvey, Dollree Mapp, Carl Delau, Lawrence Roth, Erwin Charles Simants, Judge Hugh Stuart, Dr. John Tupper, Tad Szulc, James Buckley, Jean D'Eau, Jose Doe, and James Plyler are the people who made this book possible. We thank them for their time, their patience, and their trust.

Of course, it was not possible to interview all the people whose names appear on the cases we've written about. However, in many instances their lawyers, families, and friends were willing to help us fill in some of the facts and human aspects that the legal briefs and decisions omit. Judge Skelly Wright and attorney Bertrand de Blanc provided us with insights into the Willie Francis case. Arthur S. Miller and Jeffrey Bowman were tremendously helpful in sharing their research on the Francis case. Bowman also read the chapter and made valuable suggestions.

Clifton Daniel and Karl Meyer made large contributions to the Bay of Pigs chapter by spending time explaining how it all happened. Daniels was also willing to read over an early draft of the chapter.

Judge Gus Solomon, who argued Dirk DeJonge's case before the Supreme Court, spent time and effort telling us about the case and opening doors for us in Oregon. E. Kimball MacColl, a historian and expert on Portland's past, provided us with background material on DeJonge and the city of Portland. Osmond K. Fraenkel, the ACLU attorney who argued DeJonge's case, assisted us with details about the Supreme Court arguments.

Erna Gans and David Goldberger were on opposite sides of the Skokie conflict, but they were both willing to spend time with us recalling painful memories. Goldberger also read over a draft of the chapter. Harvey Schwartz, the Skokie village attorney, helped by recalling a number of details that never made their way into the newspapers.

David Roth, son of Lawrence Roth, and William Butler, the appellants' attorney, spent time recalling the events surrounding the Engel case. Judge Arlin Adams, an expert on religious history, was our teacher on much of the background material and willingly read over our chapter.

Judge Richard M. Markus of the State Court of Appeals of Ohio was helpful in providing documents from the Mapp case. William Banard, assistant managing editor of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, opened the newspaper's files to us.

The Near chapter is a condensation of the book Minnesota Rag by Fred W.