UNFAITHFUL HELEN, CAUSE OF TROY'S FALL.—BY E. G.

Helen, O Helen! Jupiter and Leda's fair, Had Meneclaus been to thee more dear No blood, no treasures would have marked a Trojan

But, Troy great, long would thy spires soar-No conflagration, no destruction of thy domes, No vassalage, no Trojans deprived of homes,-Not for you, no Priam chiefs to war would call, But you, Helen, yourself to Paris did sell, And for you brave and noble Hector fell. King Priam too, for thee was slain, And Trojans fell like descending rain. But until Ulysses the Palladium of Troy stole, And the mystery of her invincibility unfold, Troy proudly and gallantly withstood the contest-Not an enemy dared her altars to infest.

And, too, with tears and wails, farewelled that shore Which to her was dear, but to be seen never more! And who but Helen is capable for effects of Achilles' wrath!

Which subdued Hector, and inundated with a bath Of blood and gore the famous "Trojan street," Which blushingly resounded with clamor of bustle

And echoed, "We are stolen away, O where shall we roam

Adeu! Troy, my happy my beloved home!"

CHRISTMAS .- BY E. G.

Travel on stars, steer your ways Through the limped effulgent sky, Let not Aurora brighten the day Before we praise the Redeemer on high.

Banish ye hours! that sadness bring, Bring the hour that a Redeemer was born, That to his praise we may sing, And bless Him the resplendent star has shown.

Ye modern sages! come to the feast; Like ancient seers, banish your sadness; Adore Him, who was shown by the star in the east, At the temple of joy and of gladness.

Behold ye! the beauteous angel soaring In the resplendent and azure blaze, On the shepherds humbly adoring, And resting his lucid gorgeous rays.

"Fear not," exclaims the celestial stranger, "I've brought you tidings of a Saviour's birth

Who lay humbly in a squalid manger, And has brought redemption down on earth." See ye the shepherds, hastening to adore Him

In his humble and his infant state, And lowly prostrating themselvrs before Him, His glory and greatness to celebrate.

Hear! the heaven swells with euphonious voices, Resounding along the cerulean sky, Angels praising, and earth rejoices The birth of Him that in a manger lie.

There is joy in the highest heaven, There is joy to the virtuous on earth, There is joy to all, and "bliss is given In the great Redeemer's birth."
