Ithen To the nineteenth interogatory deponent answers and says—
I do not know that I had ever seen the hand writing. I do not now recollect that I was familiar with it. I am not certain that I ever saw the hand writing before. I had heard my mother say whose hand writing it was, but do not now recollect whose she told me it was. I have seen the hand writing of my father often, but do not recollect whether it was his hand writing - if I was now to see the hand writing of my father, I do not know that I could distinguish it from any other. I do not know that the bond was in the hand writing of my father or not."

Ithen. To the twentieth interogatory deponent answers and says.
I have seen the bond dated 1796 more frequently than that of 1794. this is a reason I suppose why I cannot recollect the witnesses on the one so distinctly as the other. I do not recollect that I ever read the bond of 1794 more than twice. which bond was in the posepsion of Peter Guillet, and the names of the witnesses to the bond of 1796, were more familiar to me than the names of the witnesses to the bond of 1794. my mother gave up the bonds to me, and told me who wrote them, but I cannot now recollect who did write them. It was about twelve months befor my mothers death when she made this communication to me, she was very much affected. she did not wish to leave them in the posepsion of my father in law at her death, she said that I was interested and maried. she feared my father in law would not take care of them. she wished me to take them, and keep them, and keep them until my brother came of age, and that if I then saw proper -

I might give them to him"

n. To the twenty first interogatory deponent answers and says
"I think she has been dead about six years"

n. To the twenty second interogatory deponent answers and says
"I think that I was maried in 1813."

n. To the twenty third interogatory deponent answers and says
"My mother had charge of my fathers title and family papers from my earliest recollection until the time spoken of in my answer to the last interogatory - I then had charge of them from that time until 1819, when I delivered them to my brother. The bond was in my posepsion from the time I received it from my mother until I delivered it to my brother, I do not recollect at what time I first saw the bond it has been a great many years ago. I have frequently seen it in my mothers chest. the bond of 1796 from John Williams to my father was kept with thirteen or fourteen other bonds, patents and plats, seperate from the papers of Doctor Stearbridge. The bond of 1794 was not delivered to me by my mother. I found it by accident among the papers of Doctor Stearbridge. after my mothers death.

n To the twenty fourth interogatory deponent answers and says.
"I thought the bond of 1796 was of importance to my brother and myself. it was wrote in a plain hand, and I read it frequently

n. To the twenty fifth interogatory deponent answers and says
"We went to see John Williams concerning the land, and to shew him the bond of 1794 which I have mentioned. Peter Guillet was under the impression that the bond belonged to my brother
